ANNIVERSARY REMINDER OF THE WAR OF 1812

seemingly ill-prepared for war either defensive or offensive. It was on the other hand opposed by a country of nearly six million whites backed by a war credit of eleven millions. The odds were certainly against Canada and Madison's expressed belief that Hull would have 'an easy and victorious progress' would seem to have some foundation, when the fighting resources of the two countries were compared.

And yet the actual outbreak of hostilities did not surprise General Brock, for he had looked upon it as inevitable. Nor did the announcement of the armistice deter him from sending a small force to the Niagara of summoning an extra session of the legislature and of establishing his own headquarters at Fort George but energetic measures planned by the general in command were in large measure nullified by the attitude of Prevost, the Governor-General who believed a declaration of war impossible, or, it declared, that offensive measures would not soon be taken. 'This in the face of the fact that Hull had already started for Detroit, there to plan his Canadian invasion.

A CENTURY AGO TODAY

Then we come to the 17th of July, one hundred years ago when the first victory of the struggle fell to the small British and Canadian force in the capture of one of the enemy's forts and that without the discharge of a musket or the death of a single combatant!

This led to the opening scenes of the war drama which were laid in the west as it was then. A little group of islands in the northern end of Lake Huron were destined to be the theatre of this initial episode and though it occupies but a few lines in the history of the war, the capture of Michilimackinac influenced by any undecided Indians to throw in their lot with the British side, and spread a much-needed confidence through the alarmed Province of Upper Canada.

years of Tory ascendancy. A quick-witted Welshman, with a musical voice, a fluent tongue, a gift of spontaneous eloquence as fresh and natural as a mountain rivulet, he had made his reputation by his ability and courage as an independent Radical. He first made his mark on Welsh questions, and Wales retains an unalterable place in his heart.

'Mr. Lloyd George is a democrat from the crown of his head to the soles of his feet. There has never been a Cabinet Minister more sympathetic to the needs and claims of these whom Carlyle called 'the dim millions.' His sympathies flow out to the toilers in the field, the factory and the mine. His heart is full of compassion for the poor and needy, worn, and broken soldiers of industry before his eyes. The nation said John Bright, lives in its cottages. Brought up in a cottage himself Mr. Lloyd George is proud of his identity in experience, knowledge, and feeling with the mass of the people.

'Society and the city' still exert powerful influences in the political world; Mr. Lloyd George is wholly unaffected by them. He does not care for society, or for society's opinion; he is utterly indifferent to the city.

'In spite of foolish detraction he is no enemy of capital. Labor and capital, he holds, have reciprocal obligations. He is not a mere visionary. His passion of pity is harnessed to strong common sense. He is no believer in a class war. He has always advocated a progressive Liberalism, and has eloquently enforced the moral to be drawn from the failure of Continental Liberalism, which perished of inanition because it had ceased to be receptive to new ideas. Let the Liberal party do its duty and keep abreast of the new needs of the time and we shall have nothing to fear from socialism. Let Liberalism proceed with its glorious work of building up the temple of liberty in this country, but let it also bear in mind that the worshippers at that shrine have to live.'

'Mr. Lloyd George has himself helped to enlarge the boundaries of Liberalism,' adds Mr. Jones. 'No man has done more to fire the Liberal party with zeal for social reform.'

NEW TRANS-ANDAN ROAD OPENED

La Paz, Bolivia, Aug. 6—Two important events in the history of Bolivia were celebrated throughout the republic today, the anniversary of the independence of Bolivia and the opening of the recently completed trans-Atlantic railway connecting Africa with La Paz. The line, which is 275 miles long, has been constructed in accordance with treaty arrangements entered into between the Chilean and Bolivian governments in 1904. The work was actually begun by the former government, but in April, 1909, a British firm undertook to complete the line and supply the rolling stock for Lstr. 2,950,000. The time named in the contract was three years, an extremely short period in view of the great engineering difficulties that had to be overcome in building the line which crosses the Andes at an altitude of 14,000 feet above sea level.
