LONDON TIMES ON THE CARTIER CELEBRATION

(From London Times, Aug. 26, 1912)

As we announce elsewhere, it is proposed to celebrate the centenary of the birth, in 1814, of Sir George Etienne Cartier, one of the chief fathers and founders of the Canadian government, by the dedication of a monument erected to his memory on the slope of Mount Royal, overlooking the City of Montreal. The site is singularly well chosen, for it has been associated with the name of Cartier ever since Canada has been known to mankind.

It was an earlier Cartier, Jacques by name, a man of the same race as the latter Canadian seafarers, who was the first European to set foot on Mount Royal, then overhanging, not the City of Montreal, but the Huron-Iroquois village of Hochelaga. He, too, had been gifted with the prophetic vision of his later namesake, might have felt "that stout Cortez when with eagle eyes he stared at the Pacific" as he gazed at the broad waters of the St. Lawrence and the Ottawa gleaming away to the westward.

The rapids of Lachine barred the further progress of his boats, but it was Jacques Cartier who first discovered the St. Lawrence and gave it its name, giving at the same time the name of Canada to the region it traversed and of Mount Royal to the hill on which he stood at the furthest point of his westward pilgrimage. The name Canada merely means a village in the Indian language from which he took it and that again is significant in its symbolism.

It is recorded of Themistocles that he pleaded that, though he had "no skill to tune a harp nor a viol, nor to play at a psalterion, yet if they did put a city into his hands that was of small name, weak and little, he knew ways and means to make it noble, great and strong." This is just what George Etienne Cartier did. We know not if he was any more of a musician than Themistocles was, though in the estimation of his countrymen he was no mean poet in the tongue of his race. But he knew ways enough, and he followed them too, to make the "village" which Jacques Cartier had named into a Dominion noble, strong and great.

George Etienne Cartier was born on September 6, 1814, at St. Antoine, in the County of Vercheres, in the Province of Quebec. He was educated for the bar and becoming a member of the Bar in Lower Canada, he soon acquired a lucrative practice in that profession. He took some part in Papineau's rebellion in 1837, and had for a time to leave the country. But he soon repented of this youthful aberration and returned to Canada as a loyal and enthusiastic subject of the British crown. From that time forward all his energies were devoted to the consolidation of all the Canadas and their development into one great self-governing confederation destined to grow in freedom, concord, content and tranquility under the British flag.

His attitude and sentiments in this regard are best expressed in a few words from a speech delivered in London in 1859 at a time when he was a member of the first Dominion government.

"The Canadian people desire to remain faithful to the old monarchial flag of Great Britain, that flag that waves over all seas, that flag which tyranny has never been able to overcome, that flag which symbolizes true liberty."

If that was the universal sentiment of the Canadian people in 1859, it was largely owing to Cartier's personal influence over Canadians of his own race that it had become so.

This was the higher spiritual element of his work for Canada—a passionate aspiration combined with unceasing effort for the reconciliation of the two races which in his youth had been so bitterly estranged. But his prophetic vision also led him to work with no less enthusiasm, not only for the domestic legislation that might make for the concord and unity of the two races that dwell together in Canada, but also for the extension, development and consolidation of that great Dominion that now stretches as John Bright once said of the United States, "from the wild billows of the Atlantic westward to the calmer waters of the Pacific main."

We need not enumerate the many measures both of internal organization and of external expansion and development with which his name is associated, the many Ministries of which he was neither a member or the chief, the many colleagues who shared his labors and contributed to their noble results. It suffices to quote Lord Dufferin's appreciation of them in a letter written in 1872, when he was Governor General of Canada and Cartier was within a few months of his death. "Your name is indissolubly incorporated with the most eventful and most glorious epoch of your country's history, commencing as it does with your entrance into political life and culminating in that consolidation of the Provinces to which your genius, courage and ability so materially contributed."

To such a man who is justly held by his countrymen to have been one of the most honest, upright and far-seeing Ministers who have ever held office in the Dominion it is eminently fitting that a worthy monument should be dedicated on the one hundredth anniversary of his birth. We commend the proposal of all who realize the greatness of Canada, her inspiring memories of the past and her not less inspiring ambition to bear a part worthy of her mighty destiny in the fortunes and burdens of our common and united Empire in the future.

A committee has been formed for the purpose under the presidency of Mr. E. W. Villeneuve. It has received encouragement and support from men of light and leading representing all shades of opinion in Canadian politics and public life, and from others of like prominence in this country. To judge by the list of names we have received, some of the most prominent we mention elsewhere, the promoters of the memorial are as is natural and fitting, well-nigh equally divided between French and English Canadians; and in particular both Mr. Borden, the present Prime Minister of Canada and Sir Wilfrid Laurier his distinguished predecessor as might be expected united in its support.

TRYING TO BRING IN WHISKERS

George Ade returns from Europe with the alarming news that whiskers are becoming popular in London, are being sent to that country in the cabins de luxe of every crack ship and are likely to develop in American crop at any minute. The news is duly incorporated in the department of "Terrible if True."

One of the most heroic things about the men of Waterloo was the whiskers they wore. The dared to brandish what the gallant men of our revolutionary time scrupulously kept off their faces. The crude days or the early nineteenth century saw whiskers actually esteemed. Soldiers, statesmen and bank presidents were hairy. Then came breezing down the corridors of time Abraham Lincoln wore them. So did General Burnside. Horace Greeley's crop was world famous. They even attained a position of elegance. The dandies of the time affected them. Old files of Eshon's Weekly and Gleason's Pictorial show countless advertisements of lotions calculated to stimulate the whiskers on the cheeks of adolescence.

But the passage of time and the development of civilization the whisker fell into disrepute. Gentlemen of established position and unquestioned financial standing wear them to an extent, frequently with a distinction which makes them almost a badge of respectability and opulence. Agricultural persons are frequently marked by their presence. French counts and Italian restaurant keepers sometimes have them. But they are always the exception rather than the rule. They are the antithesis of smartness. Mr. Gibson drove them to the outer darkness and almost drove the moustache with them when he started the entire American male population under the age of 40 trying to look like his pictures. Nobody gives moustache cups for Christmas presents now.

The whisker is relegated to its proper position, the excess baggage of the man who thinks he adds to his beauty by building additions on his countenance. We don't want to see the street full of them as they were in the sixties and seventies. It is much better to perceive the freemen of the land clean cut, unencumbered and sanitary. Paucitism should protest against recognition of the British whisker revival.
