HUNDREDS VISIT THE STRICKEN CITY OF REGINA

Regina, July 8.—Crowds come to Regina on every train from all parts of Western Canada.

Some of the arrivals had friends or relatives here and came to assist or learn if assistance was required.

Commercial travellers made up not a small part of the contingencies. They were here to learn how their families had fared.

More numerous, however, were just the sight-seers. They came in scores, even in hundreds, to see the wreck the tornado had made of the Queen City. The curious were from all parts of Western Canada. Winnipeg sent scores. Moose Jaw sent scores. Edmonton sent many. Fort William and Port Arthur were represented.

Advices from Winnipeg and other points state that many others are on the way. Regina for a few days will be the Mecca of the curious on the continent.

Not a few of the arrivals were men who are coming to seek work. They will be eagerly welcomed, for Regina will be able to provide work for hundreds for the next few months. It is probable that hundreds will come, with the prospect of sure work and good pay.

J. E. McInnis was appointed chairman of the committee to have charge of the storing of furniture salvaged from the ruined buildings.

"No man need leave Regina because of this calamity," declared Mayor McAra at the meeting of the executive of the relief work this morning.

The city owns a million dollars' worth of property suitable for building purposes, in the west, and he suggested that it be sub-divided into lots and that the city erect comfortable homes upon it, and sell or rent them to the people who lost their homes in the cyclone.

Five hundred houses would be erected, he said, and in order to do this the city would require no more power than it has now, as it owns the property and could raise money to erect the buildings.

"This calamity will either make or break Regina, and we should take a heroic stand upon this matter. We must assure those in the city and outside that the city will render every possible assistance to those whose property was destroyed, and that they will be assisted in the re-erection of their homes."

Will the city guarantee the interest on the mortgages and loans?

Ald. Peart said that nine-tenths of the houses on the north side would not be re-built, as they were not owned by the people living in them, and that the property would be taken up by warehouses.

His Worship referred to the idea of a general assessment, but that this was made practically impossible by the magnitude of the loss and the fact that such an assessment was merely one of courtesy and could not be legally collected.

"Men have come to me and asked what was to become of them," said Ald. Martin. "And I believe that this executive must do something to give them tangible assurance that they will be helped."

Lieut.-Governor Brown said that he had been busy all day yesterday caring for the embalmers of his own many of whom suffered from the disaster during the time spent in the work he had looked into the situation.

"There are many men concerning whom you would think twice before offering them aid and to whom you could not offer charity and who have not been reported to the relief committees because they have been taken in by friends, but for whom the city must do something."

In the case of those who own their homes and had the savings of a lifetime in them, but who are now absolutely penniless, he declared that the city would need to take some steps to assist them in negotiating loans.

"It will cost fifty per cent. more to build than it did three years ago, and unless some aid is lent that part of the city will be filled up with shacks and you cannot raise much tax on shacks. So it is a matter of whether the city will guarantee their loans and thus assist them in erecting substantial houses which in turn will bring more to the city treasury, or whether the best part of the city will be built up with shacks."

"Within a week some definite plan should be announced with regard to what the city is prepared to do in assisting these people in meeting their payments on mortgages and also to assist them in securing cheap money with which to rebuild."

Mayor McAra, after making his declaration that the city of Regina would see that they were taken care of, said that it was only a matter of working out the scheme which would be employed for the purpose.

"We own whole blocks of property west of Albert street," he said, "and on this property we could erect five hundred substantial homes which will be a credit to the city. This property is ours and we can raise money on it and the houses would be erected by the city. Anyone wishing to buy these houses could do so at once, while others would have the use of houses for a rental."

"If the city has not the power to deal with this matter as they wish to in the interests of the sufferers, the legislature can be called together almost immediately to give the city the power needed," declared Lieutenant Governor Brown.

"We can do it all right and no one need worry over the future because their home was wiped out in the disaster," was the unanimous sentiment of the executive.

"REGINA, FIRST" IS THE CITIZENS' RALLYING CRY.

Under the heading "Regina First" The Regina Leader, in an editorial on the disaster says:

"At the very height of an important party contest the men of Regina are today giving little thought to political questions and considerations. That is one of the facts justifying confidence that Regina will conquer the difficulties which have been thrust upon it."

"The situation is as it should be. Party struggles lose in importance in comparison with the great problems which the people of Regina must now face."

"Men of both political parties are together grappling with the problems forced upon Regina by Sunday's tragic moments. Men who are loyal to different religious beliefs stand side by side and labor for the common good."

"These are conditions which make stricken Regina proud of her citizenship. But, more than this, they are conditions which must continue to prevail throughout the days of difficulty which the city must now face."

"The problems which this city will be compelled to solve will be such as to tax the best efforts of our citizens. They can be solved only through the united endeavors of a united people who will allow no petty things to hamper them in the task of building up a Greater Regina."

"The task is worthy of men who are men. It will not be a task for weaklings or for men of small minds who cannot give to questions which arise their proper places in the scale of relative importance."

"The future of Regina demands today the best which Regina can give. Until the city retrieves the loss that has come to it 'Regina first' must be the watchword of our citizens."

"The attitude which has been adopted by our people in the sorrow-filled hours which have passed since the disaster abundantly warrants the belief that all classes will be loyal to that watchword. Party politics have been forgotten, though party feeling had been at its flood. Such differences of class as may have existed have been cast aside as unworthy."

"With such a spirit among our people the future of our city is assured, though the loss which they are bearing is great and the grief deep. Regina's citizens are enrolling under the banner of the common good. Trivial things are thrust away."

"The people go forward with the watchword 'Regina first,' to overcome the consequences of Regina's disaster."
