SEER'S GAME AN OLD ONE

Modern faddists who claim to have invented the new wrinkles in mysticism might bear in mind that in the second and third centuries there were many would-be sensationalists who maintained regular schools in which they taught tricks of the trade. History recalls the names of Clemens, Pantaeus and Origen as the leading mystic school masters of those days. Alexandria was their headquarters, and we are told that the more matter of fact philosophers who also ran private colleges and classrooms, occasionally branded the three gentlemen referred to as quacks.

In the Middle Ages Germany came to the fore as a hotbed of mystic teaching. Eckhart, 1251 to 1329, and John Tauler of Strassburg, 1290-1361 were the foremost exponents of mystic thought.

Henry Suso of London and Birmingham, 1300 to 1365, absorbed enough of these German teachings to spread them in revised form throughout England.

MARRIAGE WITH A DYING MAN

Geneva, May 14.—A strange marriage took place here yesterday. A handsome Frenchwoman, aged twenty-nine, had received an order of expulsion from the canton of Geneva, but outwitted the local police by visiting a hospital and inquiring whether there was an incurable or dying Genevese patient under treatment there.

She was told that there was one, and a nurse introduced her to a man named Baudit, fifty-nine years of age, who agreed to marry the Frenchwoman on payment of £6 cash down and £ monthly so long as he lived.

The bride presented the bridegroom with a new suit of clothes and other necessities, and the couple drove in a motor-car to a register office, where the ceremony was performed. The bridegroom then returned to the hospital and the bride to her flat. They will probably not see each other again. The bride, being now a Genevese, cannot legally be expelled, and the judge's order of expulsion is valueless.

The newspapers describe the marriage as a scandalous affair.

Straw hats have been reported by keen-eyed observers. Spring is on the way.

'Twas like pulling an ulcerated tooth but Germany finally said it—
"Ja."

PLAYS TRICK ON CHAPLIN

Los Angeles, May 14.—Charlie Chaplin, is confined to his bed at his home here today with both legs and arms swathed in oil-soaked bandages recovering from burns which he sustained yesterday while enacting a new film "Vanity Fair" in his studio in Hollywood.

Fate played a singularly cruel prank on Charlie, who believed that the sight of a flame from an acetylene torch singeing him from the rear as he executed a Chaplinesque hop would delight thousands. He stumbled as he approached the torch however, and his clothing was ignited. Carl Robinson, Chaplin's personal representative; Edna Purviance, who played opposite him, and electricians quickly rushed to the comedian's side with wet blankets, which they wrapped about him and extinguished the fire.

Chaplin was carried to the studio hospital, where it was found that his arms, legs and body had been severely scorched.

THE AUTOISTS LATEST FAD

(New York Sun.)

Little bronze figures, hand sculptured are the latest fad of the automobilist. The water cap on the hood of the machine has always been a place that invites adornment and novelty, but hitherto its scope has been limited to inexpensive innovations.

The new fad is expensive which perhaps makes it more interesting. The bronze figures are sculptured to represent many things, usually a figure poised as though for flight or something which expresses the spirit of the motorist.

To Be Graduated at Acadia.

Miss Irma Fash, daughter of Rev. and Mrs. Z. L. Fash of this city, will be graduated by Acadia University at its closing exercises. Rev. Mr. Fash will attend the closing and will be absent from his pulpit at the George street Baptist Church on Sunday next. Rev. J. B. Daggett of Matysville will preach in the morning and Rev. W. D. Wilson in the evening.

A MONUMENT TO GENERAL GALLIENI

(By Dominion News Service.)

Paris, May 12.—In the cemetery of Saint Raphael in this city there was a touching ceremony which recalled memories of the most perilous days of the war for France and of the genius which saved Paris from being once more occupied by the German armies. It was the inauguration of a simple monument, a bust in bronze on a pedestal, to General Gallieni, Governor of Paris, who preferred that his body should repose in the cemetery of Saint Raphael rather than in the Pantheon. "I have received a mandate to defend Paris against the invader, and I will carry it out to the end." This, the famous Order of the Day of Sept. 3, 1914, figures on the monument besides the dates of the principal events in the general's life. But for the Cabinet crisis there would have been several statesmen at today's ceremony. Nevertheless, General Mangin, who took the place of the Minister of War in unveiling the monument, delivered a glowing discourse which showed that he is a master of language as well as of military tactics. The general's eulogy of General Gallieni, whose supreme effort resulting in the saving of Paris—for everybody now speaks of him as "the saviour of Paris"—was preceded by a remarkably successful career as an administrator, during which he created France's colonial army, was followed by warm orations from the president of the Paris Municipal Council and the Prefect of the Seine.

This will not be the only monument to General Gallieni. Paris will show its gratitude to him by erecting a monument on one of its most sacred spots, the Place des Invalides, not far from the general quarters where he spent hours, tragic but glorious, and issued those orders which enabled Joffre to defeat the Germans on the Marne and saved Paris.

"No use arguing with the fellow," remarked the Man on the Car, "who insists there is no money in doing unto others as he would have others do unto him."

There's a lot of difference between a cellar full of coal and one full of booze, but the financial outlay necessary to acquire either is about the same.
