OF INTEREST TO WOMEN

FASHION HINTS.

Hatpins as hatpins are not worn on the new hats. But ornaments attached to the end of hatpins are in vogue. And very often just the needed touch of color or suggestion of line may be given a hat with an ornamental hatpin. Some of the new ones are especially effective. There are daggers of colored stone—jade amber and blue glass—that give width to the too narrow hat. There are tassels of beads and chains that give drooping line to the hat that is to stiff. There are pins with groups of earrings circles of jet that hang over the hair. So whatever you want you can probably find it in a hairpin.

Black and white checked silk is manipulated into the most charming little purses—envelope handbags to be exact big enough to carry a handkerchief in one's change or bills, with perhaps a couple of matinee tickets. These bags cost about $5.

There are other charming handbags made of Chinese brocade with carved Chinese ornaments for the fastening and a twisted silk cord for the handle. And still other lovely ones are made of velvet embroidered in steel beads.

Ribbon rosettes big ones really more in the nature of cocades made of stiff corded ribbon are held in place on evening slippers by flaring buckles of metal or beads.

Lovely boudoir slippers are made with flaring ostrich fringe around the upper edge and others with ostrich pompons on the toe.

Black lace scarfs in every shape and size are sold nowadays. They are graceful adjuncts to the evening dress if they are properly worn.

Monkey fringe is still in evidence on frocks for afternoon and evening, especially those of the better sort for monkey never has been and apparently never will be a fashion that appeals to the masses in this country. That keeps is of course for the few since Paris continues to sponsor it.

Some of the little toques of the season are converted into the quaintest and most becoming little bonnets by the addition of chin straps or ribbon or bands of roses mounted on ribbon. They frame the face most enticingly.

The chrysanthemum is tremendously in the fashion at present. It appears on frocks for afternoon and evening made of silk and velvet sometimes as separate petals strewn about the surface of bodice and skirt sometimes each flower by itself sometimes several flowers grouped together. It is also used on hats—a big flat chrysanthemum on the edge of the brim the petals some of them back curling over the brim edge.

Heavy ecru lace combined with black silk crepe is one of the smart things in the new French clothes. One charming evening frock shows a bodice of the ecru lace with a skirt of black.

"Was there any excitement at the shore last summer?" asked Esther.

"Yes," replied Dolly. "One day as I was sitting on the pier a man who couldn't swim fell off. I ran to where there was a coil of rope for just such purposes and threw it to him."

"Perfectly great! And pulled him out?"

"No I didn't have anything to pull out I threw him the whole coil."
