RABBIT WAS DEAD
ONE ON THE MINISTER

Time—1844 A. D.

Place—The North of Ireland.

Editor of the Daily Mail:

Sir,—We had been getting a new minister—an assistant. He was a young man, unmarried, and was boarding at the House of a prominent member of the congregation, whose name, let us say, was Brown. It was autumn, and, during some conversation regarding the number and kind of game in the district, the minister declared himself a 'keen sportsman.' Mr. Brown, on hearing this, mentally resolved to put him to the test. Accordingly, he was out the following morning bright and early with his gun and having shot a rabbit, he left the dead 'bunny' sitting up on its hunkers near the place where it had been shot, and in plain sight, then quickly made his way back to the house and put away his firearm.

Minister just getting up. Morning sir—good morning, and, wouldn't you like this we take a stroll on the moor this morning before breakfast? Perhaps we might see some game. The minister was willing, so the 'Fowling Piece' was brought out and loaded when the pair started off, the cleric carrying the gun and ammunition. They had not been long gone when the Minister spied the rabbit, put piece at full cock, placed butt at shoulder, took aim. One, two, three, bang! When the smoke had cleared away, it was seen that 'bunny' still held the fort, apparently uninjured.

Minister reloads the Piece, takes careful aim and fires the second time with a similar result. Upon seeing this, Mr. Brown ventured some remarks regarding poor marksmanship. The Minister mildly resented this, and laid the blame on the firearm. Mr. Brown said he could guarantee that the weapon was all right, as he had used it quite recently. But, if the clergyman wished to get that rabbit, it might be necessary for him to use a 'silver bullet.' I would presume that some old country people believe that if a witch or an Irish fairy should get plugged with a 'silver bullet' it would be sure death, whereas these gentry are said to be immune to leaden missiles, as the clergyman did not happen to have such a bullet in his possession at the time, it was decided to make a reconnaissance when it was learned that some person or other had played them a trick.

All's well that ends well. The Minister got his rabbit, but he didn't hear the last of it for some time following, and by the way the householder's name was not Brown but Alexander Gilmour, Esq.
