COOL THOUGHTS.

At the outer end of nowhere, 2,000 miles west of the Cape of Good Hope and 4,000 miles northeast of Cape Horn, lies Tristan da Cunha, comprising three small volcanic islands, which will come under the scientific survey of Sir Ernest Shackleton in his new expedition through Atlantic, Pacific and Antarctic seas.

Human isolation reaches its climax in this British "colony." By comparison Pitcairn's Island, in the South Pacific, famed as the last refuge of the mutineers of the Bounty, is populous and contiguous to civilization. In 1900 there was a total of fifty-five persons living on remote Tristan da Cunha. The islands, once occasionally visited by East Indian, lie entirely beyond present day commercial routes.

In 1906 the inhabitants of these mountainous ridges protruding above the level of the South Atlantic were invited by the British Government to migrate to South Africa, and were even offered allotments of land there. They refused.

Little is known of the fate of Tristan da Cunha during the war period. Presumably those who persisted in living also persisted in describing their unique habitat as home. The meager accounts of the islands contain, however, such statements as these: "Rain is frequent. In summer the average temperature is 55 degrees Fahrenheit." The average throughout the year is 63, the season, of course, being reversed in the Southern Hemisphere.

Sweltering Frederictonians will not insist on the repetition of these facts in order to comprehend the reluctance of Tristan da Cunha to emigrate. Nor in this June, 1921, will the inclination to pity Sir Ernest Shackleton prove irresistible. His taste in travel and his ability to gratify it, are, indeed, as much to be envied as are the climatic delights which Nature in her compensatory mood lavishes upon the fortunate few in the most obscure corner of Britain's diversified Empire.

When the sun blazes and the humidity climbs and the crops burn, think of Tristan da Cunha. It is far away, of course—like Paradise.

THE JOY OF CREATION.

"To know the deepest satisfaction in life you must become creative workers," President Burton told the graduating class of the University of Michigan.

Now what can the average citizen do with an injunction like that? The university is bigger than the student body of any year's enrollment and the president overlaps the university. All Michigan took the baccalaureate address to heart. How, then may the average individual hope to attain this "deepest satisfaction in life?"

Everybody knows the standard criticism of our age of specialization—that it prevents creative work. The automobile worker sets a jig to bore holes or solders partitions in gasoline tanks all day. What creative work is there in that? So is the tendency in all our quantity production. Are these, then, debarred from the deepest satisfaction in life? That were a hard lot.

But modern life is not so simple. The man who merely slips bolts into an endless procession of castings eight hours a day has not and can not narrow all the activities of his life to that elemental process. Day by day he is creating, an intricate complex of relationships. Why should he not find his deepest satisfactions in life in consciously and intelligently and sincerely and conscientiously giving direction and shape to these creations?

He may take an attitude of optimism and loyalty and pride in the institution in which he is employed which will "create" a helpful atmosphere sensed by all who work with him or come near him. He may exercise his creative ability toward good citizenship and support of the best in his community life. He may create a home and in it conduct himself in an exemplary manner. In such creative activities there are gradations for all degrees of ability, but to the man who creates great movements for reform or enterprises for the political and social betterment of a city, and to the man who creates a backyard garden there is a common reward—it is the deepest satisfaction in life.

St. John Globe.—Whether the farmer movement be regarded as a class movement or the evidence of a new democracy, its victories, in recent elections must be accepted as convincing expressions of a widespread demand for far-reaching changes in our political affairs. The government may decide to ignore this demand but there are yet other bye-elections pending. If they go as Medicine Hat went a general election will offer the only means of escape from a parliamentary session in which the government might find itself unable to control terror stricken supporters, who are now talking independence in the hope that such a course may restore them lost political advantage.

London Daily Telegraph: We trust that the agreement reached in the coal trade may mark the beginning of an awakening by the workers generally to the disaster that must overwhelm them, as well as the nation as a whole, unless they recognize the real factors in our economic state as opposed to the crude theories of extremists. We hope that, with new-born wisdom they will settle down to the task of doing an honest day's work for an honest day's wage, whether on a profit-sharing basis, as in the case of the miners, or otherwise. For many months to come we shall suffer from the consequences of the disastrous struggle which is now brought to a close, and only a united effort can we hope to ward off its worst effects.

Brazil, which is almost wholly in the tropics, has the opportunity to upset the very highest civilization in a tropical climate. The census, just completed, credits Brazil with 30,500,000 people, which makes it the second American country in point of population. Some modern men of science maintain that when means have been found to utilize the heat of the sun as a mechanical energy the tropics will become centres of production and therefore of civilization. If that should be true, what country could match Brazil, with its great resources of minerals, timber and land, and its great navigable river.

La Presse: In order to obtain the right to vote at the next election the bachelors of Montreal will be obliged to pay their special tax of ten dollars at the City Hall. The bachelor is, therefore, much worse treated than the ratepayers, who are allowed by law to vote, even although they have not paid their water tax. Why is this favoritism shown to the disadvantage of the bachelor? Our legislators ignore the fact that according to St. Paul and the teaching of the Catholic church the bachelor is in a higher state of living than the benedict.

The London Observer: Ireland, Cabinet tremors and the issues of the Empire Conference have been almost inseparable topics. The shadow and pathos of the industrial crisis have contrasted with the brilliancy of sporting and other social events—like the gravity of the drought with the splendour of summer. So the past week, like Shakespeare, has been divided into comedies, tragedies and histories.

A loss of more than 35,000,000 in the world population has been traced to the world war by a committee formed to investigate the losses. The actual battle deaths were more than 9,000,000, the others were caused by war epidemics, food blockades and starvation, and the fall in the normal birth rate.

TORTURED BY TERRIBLE ECZEMA

Suffered Three Years Until She Tried "FRUIT-A-TIVES"

DAME PETER LAMARRE

Pointe St. Pierre, P. Q.

"I think it my duty to tell you how much your medicine has done for me. I suffered for three years with terrible Eczema. I consulted several doctors and they did not do me any good.

Then, I used one box of 'Sootha-Salva' and two boxes of 'Fruit-a-tives' and my hands are now clear. The pain is gone and there has been no return. I think it is a marvelous cure because no other medicine did me any good and I tried all the remedies I ever heard of, without benefit until I used 'Sootha-Salva' and 'Fruit-a-tives'.

'Fruit-a-tives' cooled the blood and removed the cause of the disease, and 'Sootha-Salva' completed the cure."
