Cities Need Good Design

London, in a design made by Sir Christopher Wren after the fire of 1666, was tendered a great plan for rebuilding the city, which the people failed to have executed, and thereby lost a great asset. Now the people of London are spending hundreds of millions to carry out some of the suggestions of Wren, knowing that it will be a paying investment for the city.

Paris spent two hundred and sixty millions in the revision of the city-plan made under Napoleon III., and has found it such a paying asset that it is going to spend two hundred and fifty millions more in similar improvements.

TALENTED LUNATICS.

Clever Work Done by People Who Are Helplessly Insane.

"I am sure," said a well-known mind doctor, "you would be amazed at the clever work that is done by hundreds of men and women who are hopelessly insane; some of it at least as good as that done by sane people who earn large incomes."

"Among my patients to-day is one man whose skill with the brush would almost surely qualify him for high rank if he were only in possession of his senses. There are few of the great exhibitions which do not contain one or more of his canvases, and he has often received a smuch as $500 for a picture. And yet this man is as 'mad as a hatter' the victim of terrible delusions and subject to violent homicidal attacks."

"Naturally, his work is unreliable. One week he will produce a masterly and beautiful picture, with genius in every line of it. The next he will paint the most weird picture, a perfect nightmare in color, which, curiously enough, he always considers a masterpiece."

There are hundreds of other lunatics who are just as skillful in music and literature. One of my own patients, who is hopelessly mad on one subject and who is a perfect musical genius, has composed operas and symphonies and scores of songs which have won considerable fame for him and have brought him a small fortune."

"Even in our public asylums there are hundreds of patients who make money skilled work of one sort or another. In a county asylum I know well a man who does the most exquisite color sketches, for which he receives from $15 to $50 each, and he has market for as many as he can produce."

"Another patient, a former sea captain, spends his time in making the most perfect tiny models of ships, carved with infinite skill and pains from bone or ivory, for each of which he gets $5 to $10. For one very elaborate and beautiful model of a cathedral he was paid as much as $150, and it was certainly very cheap at the price. A third patient in the same asylum earns many dollars a year by putting the cleverest silhouettes out of colored paper."

"Other patients are equally skilled in a very wide range of industries, from inventing toys and puzzles to making watches and picture frames and from breeding canaries and mice to raising flowers."

"The women, too, are just as clever as the men. I know one demented woman who writes the most charming books for children, and verses for Christmas cards, another who makes a good income, in her lucid hours, by illustrating books, and a third who draws several hundred dollars a year from royalties on her plays. And there are countless women in our public asylums who earn money in scores of ways, such as knitting, lace making, straw plaiting and leather work."

London Statues.

The proposal to erect a monument to Sir Francis Drake in London is a reminder that the erection of outdoor statues to great British men and women is a practice of by no means modern growth. The statue of Queen Elizabeth on the Church of St. Dunstan-in-the-West, which originally formed part of the new Lud-gate built in 1586, was one of the earliest examples, while another was Herbert Le Sueur's equestrian statue of Charles I. at Charing Cross, which was cast in 1633. Since then Londoners have successively given every one of the Sovereigns an outdoor statue with the exception of George I.

Apart from the statues of contemporaries which are now put up promptly, London has within the last few years commemorated in this way many notable worthies long since departed. Not many months since Clive was commemorated by a statue in Whitehall; the statue in Old Palace Yard of Oliver Cromwell, presented by Lord Rosebery, dates from 1899; the first London statue of Dr. Johnson was unveiled a year or two ago in the churchyard of St. Clement Danes; and, to add but one more example to the list, the first statue in London of that great Londoner, John Milton, was unveiled in Fore Street as late as 1904. The next addition to London's statues of national worthies will be one of Captain Cook, which will adjoin Sir Ashton Webb's Admiralty Arch.

Feeding the Farm Horse.

The ideal ration is one that keeps the horse in a good, thrifty condition at a minimum cost. One serious mistake made by practical farmers is to feed working rations on idle days, thinking to prepare the horse better for the heavy work to come. A good practical ration for a 1,500 pound horse doing hard work is ten pounds of corn, eight pounds of oats, two pounds of bran and twelve pounds of clean, bright, mixed hay. The bran is a laxative and may be used as a corrector. If the horse is allowed the run of pasture during the night the bran should be entirely eliminated.—Country Gentleman.

How the Baby Talked.

Mr. Bacon: I was up to see the Smarts' baby to-day.
Mrs. Bacon: Did they make him talk?

"Yes."
"What did he say?"
"I couldn't understand. I think it's a great mistake for a mother to teach a child to talk when she has hairpins in her mouth!"—Yonkers Statesman.

The Housekeeping Instinct.

A bright little girl who had successfully spelled the word "that" was asked by her teacher what would remain after the "t" had been taken away.
"The cups and saucers," was the prompt reply.

Her Powers.

Blank was accosted by a fellow citizen the other night, who said: "I heard your wife lecture. Her power of diction is wonderful."
"Yes, fair. But it's nothing to her power of contradiction."

He Had Room.

"Dear me, Tom, you eat a good deal for a little fellow," remarked Uncle John to his nephew.
"I'spect I aren't so little inside as I look outside," was Tom's ingenious answer.

Strength

Does not come from exercise alone, but also from the food one eats.

For real strength there is no better food than

Grape-Nuts

A breakfast dish of Grape-Nuts and cream is the regular morning custom of a mighty host who know the value of right food.

Being partially predigested, Grape-Nuts is quickly converted into strength for body and brain—the power to "do things."
