Nothing so Sure to "Set Up" a Man
Make Him Feel Brisk and Vigorous
As Dr. Hamilton's Pills

Lack of exercise and overwork were the causes that combined to almost kill Samuel S. Stephens, Jr., one of the best known citizens in Woodstock.

In his convincing letter, Mr. Stephens says:—
"A year ago I returned home after a long trip, completely worn out. I was so badly affected by chronic biliousness, so much overcome by constant headaches, dizziness, that I despaired of ever getting well.

"It was a blessing that I used Dr. Hamilton's Pills. In one week I felt like a new man. The feeling of weight and nausea in my stomach disappeared. My eyes looked brighter, color grew better, and, best of all, I began to enjoy my meals. The dizziness, languor and feeling of depression passed away, and I fast regained my old-time vigor and spirits. Today am well, thanks to Dr. Hamilton's Pills.

For health, strength, comfort and good spirits there is no medicine like Dr. Hamilton's Pills, 25c. per box, five boxes for $1.00, at all druggists The Catarthozone Co., Buffalo, N. and storekeepers, or by mail from Y., and Kingston, Canada.

CANADIAN LAW IS COMMENDED

American Paper Says Canada Has Least Security in World For Escaping Criminals

The New York American referring to the capture of H. K. Thaw in Canada said: "Of all countries in the world, Canada offers the least security to strangers with unpleasant chapters in their histories. The Dominion has a cold way of looking at these things, that, to a suspect, must appear exceedingly inhospitable. In the first place, the Canadian courts have absorbed from the present British tradition an appalling contempt for technicalities. Anyone who has ever watched criminal trials of the present day in England must have been impressed with the brusque attitude of judges to phrase-juggling or efforts to translate words into some meaning other than what might be called their 'horse sense.' Barristers even hesitate to chance the snub of 'his worship' by advancing a technical objection, unless it be unusually clever and subtle, in which case the court may, after a few brief, keen-witted sallies, leave it to the jury, with a shrug, as much as to say: 'You gentlemen of common sense are, of course, not going to take such mental gymnastics into consideration. This reaction from a too technical period, when a misspelled name or word by an ill-fed engrosser could almost upset an indictment, has had its effect on Canadian practice. We recall the cases of Greene and Gaynor after the Captain Carter-Savannah harbor scandal. In these the defendants, refugees drenched with unlimited money in a luxurious hotel in Quebec, fought with the aid of the most astute legal talent for months, right through all the Canadian courts to the Judicial Committee of the Imperial Privy Council in London, only to be landed back ignominiously in the United States for trial and sentence.

Jack Johnson, the pugilist only escaped the clutches of this law by having in his possession a through ticket from Chicago to Havre, France, which had been actually purchased in Chicago and was convincing evidence of his bona fide intention to seek neither refuge nor residence in Canada. The criminal offence of which he had been convicted in Illinois was not an extraditable offence, the Mann White Slave Act having been passed long after the extradition treaty had been negotiated. Even at that, the Canadian immigration authorities never lost sight of him until he left the country on a steamship. Nor did he then take a chance on landing at any British port."

SEAL IN NEWFOUNDLAND

An Effort to Commercialize the By-Products Failed

An enthusiastic genius from England who visited Newfoundland promoting a scheme for developing various fishing industries more extensively, advocated the employment of a steamer to follow the sealing fleet, pick up all the carcasses, and bring them into St. John's, where the best of the meat might be sold and the remainder converted into fertilizer; but it was pointed out to him that if it would pay a steamer to do this it would pay her very much better to engage in the actual seal hunt, and the scheme thereupon collapsed. The same genius it was who proposed, and actually did put into practice, the experiment of canning flippers and offering them for sale, but it is scarcely necessary to observe that as the appetite for these dainties is somewhat of an acquired taste he has not yet succeeded in inducing even the Island railway to include them in its dining-car menu. At the same time it must not be imagined that there is anything unpleasant or unpalatable in seal flippers, because the contrary is the case. They are excellent nourishing food. The flipper or the carcass must be eaten fresh to enjoy it at its best, but staleness is not an insuperable obstacle, as may be understood from the fact that the salting of both into barrels for summer consumption is by no means unusual. Just as with beef and other meats the flipper or carcass of an old seal is not nearly so delicate or tender as the younger one, and it becomes rancid through the operation of the oil much quicker. There is, however, an ample number of the flippers of young seals obtainable every year to satisfy all of the local demands, and it would be no exaggeration to say that the sturdy health of the 4,000 Terranovian seafarers who tread the Arctic icefloes in the quest for these creatures is due in a substantial measure to their indulgence in flippers and seal meat, which provides the good red blood and the other elements that make for strength and physical endurance.

FISH STORIES

Lightning Killed a Bass Weighing Eleven Pounds

From the Eastern Townships of Quebec there came a story of an eleven-pound black bass killed by lightning. That was pretty good. Nobody had ever seen an eleven-pound black bass before in the world, and nobody had ever seen a fish killed by lightning. The story was a double-edged stroke of genius. Next from the New England States there came a story of a lad who rammed his fist into the gills of a fish in dining and landed another big one. And this was followed up by a story from Baltimore, where an old tar tells of having his ship lifted out of the water on the back of an enormous whale.
