When a rough, sturdy, manmastering lumber driver, boss of the lawless "river jacks," starts out to win the heart and hand of an aristocratic young woman of eastern wealth and fashion, interesting things are apt to happen. They do happen, as readers of this story will agree. Jack Orde is the type of man who has gone into the American wildernesses and reclaimed them from themselves, from lawbreaking and debauchery. The brilliant author's descriptions of the battles between man and nature and between man and man in the lumber fastnesses of the great northwest set one's blood a-tingle. They show that man is superman when courage swells his heart. And the wooing and winning of Carroll Bishop by Jack Orde supply captivating romance that cannot fail to charm.

ed campfires. Orde, glancing around him, noticed these.

"Doctor," he commanded sharply, "get at your grub! Make some coffee right off and bring it down. Come on, boys!' Dentist

Over a score of men attacked the sluiceway, for by now part of the rear crew had come down river. The pond above had recovered its volume. Water was beginning to trickle over the top of the gate. The men worked up to their knees in swift water. They could not see, and the strokes of ax or pick lost much of their force against the liquid. Down by the sluice a doz-en lanterns flickered and blinked yellow against the blue blackness of the night. Orde opened the sluice gates. The water had become too deep for effective work, and a half hour's flow would reduce the pressure. The time was occupied in eating.

When the meal was finished the men lit their pipes and went back to work philosophically.

Near midnight a swaying lantern was seen approaching. Orde heard the sound of wheels. A moment later Daly's bulky form stepped into the illumination of the fire.

Orde wandered over to where his employer stood peering about him.

"Oh, there you are!" cried Daly augrily. "What in h— you up to here?"
"Running logs," replied Orde coolly.
"Running logs!" shouted Daly, producing a much folded newspaper. "How about this?"

Orde lowered the paper to the campfire. It was an extra, screaming with wood type:

Rioting and Bloodshed In the Woods. Rivermen and Dam Owners Clash.

There followed a highly colored statement that a skirmish had left the field in possession of the rivermen, in spite of the sheriff and a large posse, but that troops were being rushed to the spot and that this "high handed defi-ance of authority" would soon be suppressed. It stated that the loss of life was as yet unknown.

"Don't you know any better than to get into that kind of a row down here?" said Daly. "Don't you realize that this isn't the northern peninsula?" "Sure I do," replied Orde placidly. "Come along here till I show you the situation."

The sheriff did not reappear. Reed evidently pow pinned his faith to the

By 3 o'clock the main abutments had been removed. The gate was then blocked to prevent its fall when its nether support should be withdrawn. Suddenly was heard an exultant yell from one of the axmen. A brief instant later the snapping of wood fibers began like the rapid explosions of infantry fire; a crash and bang of timbers smote the air, and then the river, exultant, roaring with joy, rushed into the new passage opened for it.

Orde stormed into the camp. "Roll out, you river hogs!" he shouted to those who had worked out their shifts earlier in the night. "Roll out, you webfooted sons of guns, and hear the little birds sing praise!"

Suddenly Orde had froze in an attitude of attentive listening. "Hark!" Faint, the wandering morning breeze of any Kind or Style bore to their ears a sound whose difference from the louder noises near at hand alone rendered it audible. "The troops!" exclaimed Orde, seizing a lantern and returned down the trail, followed eagerly by Newmark and every man in camp.

The men drew a little to one side, watching the dim line of the forest, dark against the paling sky. A man rode out of the shadow and reined up by the fire. "Halt!" commanded a harsh voice. The riverman could make out the troops-three or four score of them-standing rigid at attention. Reed pushed forward

"I wish to inquire, sir," asked the commanding officer of Orde, "if you have gone mad to counsel your men to resist civil authority?"

"I have not resisted civil authority," replied Orde respectfully. "The reports have been false. The sheriff of this county has arrested about twenty of my men single handed and without he slightest trouble."

"Mr. Morris," cried the officer sharpy, "is what this man says true?" "It sure is. Never had so little fuss arrestin' rivermen before in my life." "Then why the devil am I dragged up here with my men in the night? eried the officer explosively. "Who's responsible for this insanity anyway? Don't you know," he roared at Reed, that I have no standing in the pres ence of civil law?" Reed started to speak.

"I've nothing to do with that; settle it in court. And what's more, you'll have something yourself to settle with the state! About, face! Forward,

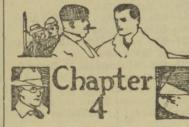

Orde burst into his deep roar of laughter. "Now you see, boys," he said, dig ging his fists into his eyes, "if you'd put up a row, what we'd have got into. No bluecoats in mine, thank you." "I tell ye, I'm not done with ye yet," threatened Reed. "I'll sue ye for damages, and I'll git 'em too."

"Now, hop along," urged Orde.
"We'll pay you any legitimate damages, of course, but you can't expect to hang up a riverful of logs just on a And we're sick of you. See here, you two; just see that this man leaves camp.' Reed hastily retreated.

"Well, goodby, boys," said Daly. 'I'll just get along and bail the boys out of that village calaboose."

HEN Newmark awoke once more to interest in affairs the morning was well spent On the river the work was going forward with the precision of Orde discovered about noon that the am crew was having its troubles. Immediately below Reed's dam ran a ong chute strewn with bowlders, which was alternately a shallow or a stretch of white water according as he stream rose or fell. Ordinarily the logs were flushed over this declivty by opening the gate, behind which a head of water had been accumulat-Now, however, the efficiency of the gate had been destroyed.

"I wonder if we can't drop that gate way down to get something for a head." said Orde to the foreman.

The two men examined the chute and the sluice gate attentively for some
