More And Better Poultry

Maturing the Breeding Pen.

Perhaps the most important matter that any poultryman has to deal with certainly for those who raise their own stock, is that of mating the birds or making up the pens from which you purpose to get your new flock for the coming year. This needs to be attended to straight away, if it has not already been done, as it will not be many weeks hence before a large number of the incubators on many farms will be going "full blast."

By this time the hens should mostly have got their new suit of clothes and you will be able to see how they have wintered, and how they shape.
The males, too, should be in fine condition, and after their long confinement to bachelor quarters, the sooner they are mated up and have the freedom of larger pens and runs, the better.

Select the Best Birds.

No matter whether you are a trap-nester or not, you will get far better results if you select your best birds, mating them to your best males and keeping them in single pens, say 1 male to 15 females in the light-weights, and 1 male to 12 females in the heavyweight classes. By adopting this system you could keep track through the incubators, without too much trouble, of the chicks hatched from these special pen eggs, and by toe punching the chicks before you remove them into the brooder, you could identify them as from such and such a pen, and their future development could be followed and very important information gained thereby. On most commercial poultry farms it would not be a practical proposition to breed in single pens only; the house and run accommodation, plant, utensils, labor and many other considerations involved in such a scheme outweighing the benefits to be gained but there should be room in every poultry farm, large or small, for several single pens, being the cream of the flock.

A word to those who do not do their own breeding, but buy their stock from those who specialize in this business. Have you placed your orders for this season's requirements?
If not, get busy, as many breeders are already well sold forward, and you may be disappointed in not being able to get what you want, or when you want it.

Incubating

It is a good plan to go over your incubators well ahead of the date you will have to get them to see that they are all complete and in thorough working order. No doubt they were all cleaned up when you were through with them last spring, but in any case get at them in good time, and if they are hot-water machines, test them out in case a leaky pipe or point or tank should be discovered. Nothing would be so upsetting to one plans as to find the incubators out of order when they should be started, due to inad-vertence in looking after a simple matter like that, or maybe the regulator rod or nut is missing or has been injured, or something else equally trivial and equally disabling, requiring perhaps a week or goodness knows how long, to get properly fixed.
The makers of some well known machines have gone out of business, and to get a missing or broken part replaced may prove very difficult if not impossible, and much ingenuity on the part of the owner or the local mechanic may have to be exercised before the machine can be got into working order. The burlap of the nursery trays or screens may be worn out, or too dirty for further use, and needs replacing, lamps and heaters want cleaning and fixing, and many other odd jobs need attention which will contribute to the good working of the machine and the success of your hatches.

Biddy Displaced

Incubators are gradually displacing the old hen, even on the farm where she shows up at her best, according to G. L. Stevenson, professor of poultry husbandry at State College of South Dakota.

"The hen's time is worth more for egg production, and the incubator is really more efficient," he says. "It will turn out just as strong chicks and many more at one time. They will be vermin free and much less liable to disease. The incubator, too, will take eggs at any time or season and is not at all dependent on the brooding instinct.

"The type of the machine, whether heated by hot air, hot water or electricity, makes little or no difference in hatching results, but a cheaply constructed machine is usually dear at any price. As a rule one should not invest in less than a 150 egg capacity machine. This will hatch the small number of eggs as well and handle the larger number when the need arises. It is an advantage to have a large number of chicks of the same age and where one does not need the larger number there is usually opportunity to sell the surplus to neighbors.

"An incubator should be thoroughly gone over early in the season for breaks, leaks in water tank or defective heating or regulating parts.
Often the disc or water type of thermostat will need to be renewed before the heating regulating device functions properly. The egg chamber, if used, should be thoroughly cleaned and disinfected as should all the other parts. The lamp should be emptied of old oil, refilled and equipped with a new wick."

Poultry Pointers

Mary had a flocks of hens, They looked like Joseph's coat, When Mary went to view her pens She said, "They get my goat."

So Mary, when she had the time, A breeding pen picked out,
The best of hens and cockerel fine Put all the scrubs to rout.

*****
Every chick has a right to be well incubated and brooded. Give him a chance by proper methods of care.

*****
Before setting a hen make a determined attack on the lice. Dust every hen and see that the surroundings are sanitary.

*****
Be careful in the selection of the eggs for hatching. Do not use eggs that are over ten days old at all if possible.

*****
Put the hatching eggs in a cool room of even temperature. They will keep better if placed on end in grain such as oats, and turned every day.

Allow the breeding pen as much range as possible. The eggs will be much more fertile if the birds get plenty of exercise.

Winter's slowly slipping Spring will soon begin
But the air is very nipping And there's no coal in the bin.

Mrs. R. B. Hanson has returned from a two weeks visit to Ottawa, where she has gone to attend the opening of parliament.
