CANADIAN STRAW MAY BE UTILIZED FOR MAKING PULP

(Financial Post)

In view of the approaching world shortage of pulp timber, British attention is turning to other sources of papermaking material within the Empire. The three main types are Canadian straw crops, bamboo and the native grasses of India. Paper has been made from straw for a considerable time past, principally in Germany and Austria, in which countries it takes the same place as esparto grass occupies in Great Britain. Efforts have been made by British mills to turn the straw crop to good account, but with indifferent success owing to the high cost of collection and great of facility for handling the cheaper esparto or wood-pulp. All told the straw crop of Great Britain constitutes a low tonnage figure.

More Straw in Canada

In Canada there are about 50 million acres of land carrying crops, the yield of which, apart from the grain, is at present sheer waste product.
With careful treatment it is easily possible to secure a 30 per cent. yield of papermaking fibre from an average straw crop. The most difficult problem is that of collection and transportation, but it is possible that in the normal course of development and opening of the country some of these difficulties would be automatically solved. At least there is an interesting proposition which can be entertained within the Empire whenever real necessity makes utilization of further sources of papermaking material imperative.

In India the several native mills have long been producing excellent grades of paper from bamboo and several sorts of grasses. The supply of these materials is illimitable. They have been tested and proved equal to esparto and woodpulp. Whether the difficulty and expense of treatment and transportation in the form of bales of half-stuff, as overcome or not, one thing is tolerably certain, namely that India will continue to develop her own resources and will ultimately satisfy the bulk of her paper demand.

May Soon Be Started

Mills for the manufacture of paper from ordinary straw may soon be established in Canada, according to Sir Frederick Becker, who holds large interests in Canadian pulp and paper companies, and who recently arrived in the Dominion.

Through the discoveries of a French scientist, de Vains, it has become possible to manufacture writing-paper and newsprint from ordinary straw, said Sir Frederick. In Canada straw was nearly always burned, and was a total loss in every respect. If the new process proved successful, straw may augment the fast diminishing sources of raw material for this pulp and paper supply of the world and bring more prosperity to the farmer, who would be able to dispose profitably of what had hitherto been wasted.

Sir Frederick Becker recently stated that if experiments now being conducted in Kent under the de Vains process proved as successful as similar operations in France, there would be no doubt of the feasibility of turning all Canadian straw into pulp. In conversation with The Financial Post, Sir Frederick promised to establish a pulp mill at Winnipeg and possibly somewhere in Saskatchewan as well.
The pulp to be made would be used for the manufacture of the higher grades of paper.

SWEET PICKLE PEARS.

Was 7 pounds of pears with stems and skin on, stick 5 tablespoonfuls whole cloves into them. Boil a 1-2 pounds of sugar with 2 cupfuls of vinegar for 30 minutes then add 4 heaping tablespoonfuls of mixed spices add a few pears at a time (taking care not to break them and cook until tender. Fill jars and seal.
