VIEW POINTS.

Tonight you will stand and look out of your window into the street beyond or below. Almost everyone does at some time during the evening. Just this once, tonight as you do this, let this thought come into your mind. Remember that another man down the street will sometime tonight look out of HIS window—into the street, beyond or below. And remember that to him the street will not look quite the same. He will see it from another window and from another angle. The life that passes beneath his window will not be mirrored on his mind quite as the life which passes beneath your window will be mirrored on yours. Yet he will draw whatever conclusions he has to draw from honest experience, the experience of sight and sense, just as you will. Reach out and take hold of that thought now and again during your busy days, days made difficult by differences of opinion, disagreements and denunciations. Hold to it. Let your judgments be tempered by it.

PUNISHMENT.

Nothing grieves a boy so much as to be punished when he doesn't deserve it. The reason he grieves is because in his immaturity he lacks philosophy to cover the case. If he had sufficient philosophy of life he would take comfort from this remark by an English school-master. Talking to a group of boys he said: "You may sometimes be punished when you do not deserve it, but think how many times you escape punishment when you do deserve it." That is a thought to which adults as well as boys and girls are welcome. Summarize your foolishness now and then and reflect with humility on the blows you have undeservedly escaped.

The Irish Free State Government has been sustained at the polls although it will not have a clear majority over the other parties in the next House. The latest returns show that the Government elected 63 supporters the Republicans 44, the Laborites 15, the Farmers 15, and the Independents 16. As the Republican members will not take the oath of allegiance they will be unable to take their seats in the House.

In a world full of insoluble problems, the Journal of the American Medical Association comes to the rescue with this: "The death of the stag's antlers is due to osteoblastic formation encroaching on the lumens of the vessels and producing ischemia."

France makes it clear that she won't settle until Germany does. All right but she must not expect applause from people who pay their debts.

An egg is good for admission to some theaters in Budapest. Possibly managers are showing wisdom in collecting them at the door.

Boston is the town where on May 1 they cease to worry about how the team will come out in the world series.

A Missouri town is so broke it can not afford a lock for the jail door. There isn't anything there to steal, either.

One of the coming movies is "Upside Down." So Russia has been filmed at last.

The wheat acreage is less but there seems to be about so much wild oats under cultivation.

THROUGH OUR SIEVE

There are a few pretty elbows.

When the four-hour day comes the loafer will lose his identity.

Wilbur Glenn Voliva says a sunset is an optical illusion. So is a red barn on a hill.

A labor leader is always willing to talk. And he ought to be, that being what he is paid for.

Lima Beane says the radical knows he is right because he can make more noise than the conservative.

She seeketh wool and flax and worketh willingly with her hands.—Solomon. She had no time to give to the club.

We are told that the "golden age is almost at hand" Nevertheless it will be the part of wisdom to keep right on negotiating paydays.

Blood will tell. The old fashioned man who used to wrap the lines around the whip socket when out driving with his gal now has a grandson who tries to steer the car with one hand.

Henry Ford says he wants to abolish poverty in America. He ought to know that when that time comes the people will buy more expensive cars.

Use of cement in street improvements has made it absolutely necessary to invent new and powerful tools with which to tear up the paving. Otherwise there would have been an end to the well-known sport.

SPECIAL ATTRACTION AT GAIETY THEATRE

Two of the screen's most popular and talented luminaries will scintillate on the Gaiety silver-sheet Wednesday and Thursday, when Norma Talmadge and Eugene O'Brien appear in their latest joint photoplay, "The Voice from the Minaret," film version of Robert Hichens' novel of the same name. It is presented by Joseph Schenck, directed by Frank Lloyd and is a First National release.

The story centres around the love affairs of a young English noblewoman and a youth preparing for the ministry. Miss Talmadge plays the roll of the wife of the governor of Bombay. Breaking under the strain of mistreatment and abuse to which he had subjected her ever since their marriage, Lady Adrienne leaves him, and on the first stage of her journey to England is thrown into contact with the youth. Andrew Fabian, played by Eugene O'Brien. Heedless of their respective vows the lovers plan to journey together to the Orient, but are awakened from their love-dream in a strange manner—a dramatic episode which should not be spoiled by being prematurely revealed.

Well, just one more moving picture actress is suing for a—you guessed it.

LITTLE STORIES OF THE TOWN

Might do More Good.

A George St. resident says it would be a lot more to the point if they'd take these new brakes off the front wheels and put them on the accelerator.

Too Many for Dorothy.

A Charlotte St. young lady says "If dishes were horses, I'd operate a riding school." She is kept busy at home while her mother is away.

Taking no Chances.

"I wonder why it is" said a bookseller "that in hot weather the trashiest books gain in popularity. I suppose it is because no mental effort is used in their personal and in the summer people think they might overheat their brain."

NEW DREDGING COMPANY.

The Eastern Dredging and Construction Co., Limited, with head office in the Parish of Simonds, St. John Co., and capital stock of forty-nine thousand dollars, is incorporated. Those incorporated as the company are J. F. H. Teed, Helen V. Flewelling and S. R. Kelly.
