TELLS OF A VISIT TO BANANA BELT IN THE WEST INDIES

May L. Simpson gives the following interesting account of the popular bananas:

I went to Jamaica to stay with friends on a banana plantation. The ship which took me from England was to return laden with a cargo of the fruit.

During the voyage out I inspected the hold where the fruit was to be stored. It stretched almost the entire length of the ship and was surrounded by narrow air passages through which circulated a continuous current of cold air, for if by chance one single bunch of the fruit ripens, then the whole cargo may have to be pitched overboard before arriving at its destination.

My first sight of the bananas was on landing at the wharf of Port Antonio. Huge bunches were being carried on the head by black girls and women, who filed by in procession.
One by one they passed a man wielding a cutlass, who as they walked cut off the long seed-pod of "navel" which hangs from the bunch of eight, nine or ten "hands." It appeared a most risky operation, placing in jeopardy the noses, if not the heads of the carriers. Long practice had, however, given them assurance, and they walked by, with their wonderful free carriage, with no trace of fear.

The sun shone as we left the coast behind, but in an hour we were in the midst of torrential rains. These, I learned later, are what the planter loves and prays for, even as the English farmer has been known to do.
For the spring rains "fill" the fruit and bring it on during May and June, while yet the prices are high.

Shelter From Rain or Sun.

This district of the Blue Mountains contains some of the finest banana "walks" or plantations in the island.

I see them now covering the hillside —acre after acre—and I hear the soft soughing sound of the wind as it lifts the huge leaf-branches beneath whose shade one can shelter as well from rain as from sun. In good soil a "walk" may be used successfully for ten or twelve years in succession, but poor soil needs rest after three or four.

The greatest fear of the planter is the comparatively new "Panama" disease. So deadly is it that it can be carried by the cutting implements as well as by the feet of the worker from one district to another. Once a plantation is infected, there is very little hope for the remainder, and one by one the trees have to be segregated and cut off by digging a ditch around the affected area. The Government of Jamaica, however, is taking every means in its power to stay this scourge, and each passenger before landing has to declare if he is in possession of any implements for cutting bananas, or been visiting or working on plantations elsewhere.

POT ROAST OF BEEF.

Use a cut from the round or the chuck. Chuck is mottled with fat while the round cut consists of very juicy, lean muscle. Wipe meat with a clean cloth. Heat an iron kettle or deep frying pan smoking hot. Sear the entire surface of the meat. Add a generous cup of water, cover the kettle or pan closely reduce the heat and cook by slow simmering.
Keep the temperature below the boiling point and renew the water as needed to keep from steaming so that the gravy may be rich in flavor.
Calculate at least an hour a pound for cooking. Four hours is the allowance for medium sized roast.

ROAD LURE.

Roads lie across the world, a lure
To restless rover feet;
Winds blow across the open sea Seductively and sweet,
And many a man would heed the call
And follow blindly fleet.

And up and down and round about Many a one is fain
To fare him forth again, again,
And laugh once more at pain
With never a chance of happiness,
And only grief to gain.

Oh, roads are ever luring sweet
To those whose hearts would roam
And winds sing ever siren songs Across the wide seas' foam . . .
Yet ever away in distant lands
The rover dreams of home.

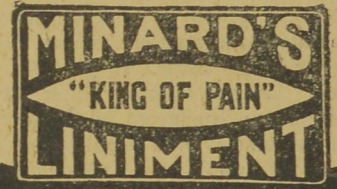

ANGUS OLLARD.

A docile disposition will, with application, surmount every difficulty.

Rub with Minard's Liniment. It penetrates, draws out the inflammation and eases the pain.

Splendid for neuralgia, backaches, rheumatism, etc.
