THE PULPWOOD ENQUIRY.

The Royal Commission appointed to secure data with reference to a proposed embargo on the exportation of pulpwood has held sittings at a number of points in the Maritime Provinces and has obtained a lot of valuable information. Public sentiment in the Maritimes as voiced by those who have testified before the Commission, appears to be strongly against the proposed embargo. Those who cut pulpwood and those who purchase the same for export seem to think that if an embargo was put on they would be at the mercy of Canadian pulpmill owners and lower prices would be the rule. For this reason they are strongly opposed to the pulpwood embargo. Public sentiment on the question is fairly well expressed by a Yarmouth man, who, in a letter to the Halifax Chronicle says:

"The proposed embargo on pulpwood is merely an attempt to try and compel owners of timber land, who now dispose of their wood to American mills as pulpwood, to hold it until Canadian mills are ready and willing to buy it at their own price. In other words, one class is to be forced to carry—assuming, in the meantime, all the risk of loss by fire, insect, and other causes without any guarantee of adequate compensation therefor. "An embargo can be made one hundred per cent effective tomorrow, without legislation, if Canadian mills will pay the price that American mills are willing to pay for the wood, and hold their own standing timber for reserves, instead of asking other timber owners to do it for them."

Mr. F. J. Barnjum, a millionaire lumberman of Montreal and Annapolis, N. S., is credited with being the father of the movement for an embargo in pulpwood. Mr. Barnjum continues to write letters on the subject to the press, but so far he has given the Royal Commission the go by. Mr. Barnjum's case might be strengthened if he were to appear before the Commission and allow himself to be cross examined.

ALL WOOL.

When the merchant tells you that this piece of goods is nearly all wool you are mildly interested. It may be pretty good. But there is something shoddy about it. When the merchant proves to you that another piece of goods is all wool, you are very much interested. You will pay a high price for it, and tell your friends it is all wool. You will feel good about it. There are shoddy people, too. They are pretty good in this way and fair in that, and quite good in another way. But they are not all wool. They contain streaks of cheaper goods. Put them under certain tests and they do very well. There are other tests under which they break down. Perks with good morals and no brains don't add much to the progress of civilization. Neither do folks with good brains and no morals. The Great Merchant is in the market for all wool folks.

Certain Tory politicians who in 1911 went about the country preaching the doctrine of "no truck or trade with the Yankees" have lately discovered that an embargo on the export of pulpwood would be a bad thing for the farmers of New Brunswick. For instance there is the case of Mr. George B. Jones, M. P., for Royal. Testifying before the Royal Commission at St. John he is reported to have said: "George B. Jones, M. P., opposed the embargo. The farmers in his section all have woodland and they cut pulpwood, all of which goes to the mills in the United States." Mr. R. B. Hanson, Tory M. P., for York-Sunbury, has given expression to similar views. Other Tory politicians who fought reciprocity in 1911 on patriotic grounds are yet to be heard from.

New Brunswick Tory politicians, among the number G. Burpee Jones, M. P. for Royal and R. Burpee Hanson, M. P., for York-Sunbury, have experienced a change of heart. They are now willing that New Brunswickers should be hewers of wood and drawers of water for the people of Uncle Sam's domain. The good old Tory slogan of former days has been thrown into the discard.

Ex-Premier Lloyd George yesterday honored the memory of Abraham Lincoln, the martyred president by paying a visit to his tomb at Springfield, Illinois. A card which he placed on the Sarcophagus bore the inscription: "A humble and reverent homage to the memory of one of the world's greatest men."

Until the human race learns to grow its own fur some settlement of the coal problem will continue to be necessary.

France for years has been worried over its low birth rate. Collective worrying, however, seems to do no good.

It won't surprise anybody if it turns out that the blowing up of a castor oil plant in Bayonne, N. J., was the work of boys.

Fall styles call for loud hats for men, but they won't be as loud as some of the talking that is done through them.

Having the biggest army and the most powerful military equipment in the world, France doesn't change her opinions easily.

Dance hall proprietors have notified the reformers that it is impossible to dispense with the shimmy. They can't shake it.

Food from vibrations, that a scientist tells us about, sounds plausible. Once there was shaking for the drinks.

LITTLE STORIES OF THE TOWN

Pretty Girl Catches Them. "One of the prettiest young ladies I have seen in many a day, was here a few weeks ago calling on the business men in the interests of an Ontario concern," said a Queen st. merchant. "I venture to say that the largest part of the business she received was because she was so pretty. Why I fell for her myself."

The Smoke of Leaves. "The small boy is beginning to burn the leaves," said a George street resident, "and the air is filled with smoke, the odor of which is more agreeable to me than any perfume ever made by the chemical expert. Then we get the haze, the thing that recalls glorious youth to us old codgers born in the country. When I see piles of leaves along the curb waiting for the street cleaning department wagons I feel sad. I just want to put a match to them and smell the smoke."

THROUGH OUR SIEVE

Don't cross the street cross-eyed.

Sooner or later the arrow points to the place where the politician went down.

Everybody ought to be happy if for no other reason than that few nightmares come true.

It is a rare thing for a woman to change her mind once she has determined to cry.

"Of the sewing circle ladies" remarked the Man on the Car "it might be said they are as buzzy as bees."

A man may have a good memory for what is coming to him and still have a poor memory for what he owes.

Scientists have predicted a severe Winter. But why didn't they forecast this beautiful Autumn and make a reputation for accuracy?

"Whither are we drifting down the stream?" asks Mr. Brisbane. It is an interesting question. If only we could drift up the stream—but that would violate still another law.

Perhaps the only way to bring about a reform in the life of cantaloupes is for everybody to quit buying until they are unquestionably ripe.

A time to weep and a time to laugh; a time to mourn and a time to dance; a time to cast away stones and a time to gather stones together; a time to embrace and a time to refrain from embracing!—Ecclesiastes in Ohio State Journal.

Surely enough to make a full day.

TAG DAY FOR CHILDREN'S HOME

Of all the cheritable and philanthropic institutions in Fredericton, the Children's Aid Society, having for its object the care and protection of the destitute and neglected children in our city and vicinity, should make the strongest appeal to the hearts and pockets of our citizens.

Since its formation the Society has rescued scores of these poor waifs, cared for their physical needs, sent them to school, placed them in good homes, and thus has given all of them an opportunity to become respectable citizens.

Surely such a work as this must elicit the sympathy and support of all. For the maintenance of this work, and the upkeep of the Children's Home considerable funds are necessary.

Both the City and County make substantial grants, but the Society has to depend largely upon the voluntary contributions of the public. The members of the Society as well as other citizens especially interested in the work have already made contributions but still money is needed to carry on to the end of the year.

It has been decided by the Executive to hold a Tag Day in the interests of the Children's Home, a notice of which appears elsewhere in this issue. It is confidently hoped that all will take advantage of this opportunity of helping forward this noble work.
