WHEN SPENDING IS SAVING

It is not the commonest of faults; and yet many are addicted to it. We refer to the fault of trying to save too much. There are households in which the only thought, with regard to money, is how much can be put away in a bank or under the dresser-top. There is a point such households should bear in mind about paring expenditures to the bone. Economies may be practised where economies are unwise. Ample and nourishing food is the first essential. Comfortable housing is hardly less important. Suitable clothing must be had. Beyond these requisites, and even in connection with them, spending should be determined in proportion to the lasting satisfactions to be had therefrom. Spending is sometimes the best kind of saving. Spending to supply a much-needed vacation may easily result in preventing a breakdown that might cost hundreds of dollars in doctors' bills. The most profitable spending of all is the investment in memories. No amount of money in the bank is so precious as a collection of pleasant experiences stored in the mind. The family that goes off on outings; that entertains friends; that has good times; that travels and sees things, may be thought by its critical neighbors to be "wasting money." Not so. It is saving memories, the best gold of all.

OUR TURN NEXT

The proposal to establish an "eat meat for health" week brings to our attention the fact that the newspapers have not yet asked for a seven-day period of good will entirely in their interest. We suggest the following weeks, to be squeezed in here and there where other businesses have failed to stake claims: "Take home more papers than you can possibly read" week. "Make the trust accept a lower price for newsprint" week. "Be good to the reporter" week. "Don't shoot the editor" week. This is five weeks and probably more than would be allotted us by the officer who distributes these public "showers" for the needy and well-meaning. But newspapers are entitled to some consideration in the matter because of their previous self-denial. Thousands of men are out on strike at Sydney, C. B. and the coal mines are idle. Troops and provincial police have been called in to protect life and property. The strike of the miners is a sympathetic one and before walking out they tried unsuccessfully to have the provincial police and troops withdrawn. Strikes at Cape Breton seem to have become a sort of annual offering and the people of the country are getting pretty well fed up on them. A grant of $58,000 to the Canadian Press, Limited, was voted by Parliament during the closing hours of the session. Mr. Cahill, Liberal of Pontiac, Mr. Healey, Liberal of North Essex and Mr. Church, Conservative of North Toronto, strongly protested against the grant, which they described as a bribe to the press of the country and Premier King gave a promise that it would be discontinued next year. The action of the Senate in defeating the government's branch line programme is not likely to be of benefit to the Tory party in the long run.

According to the story of a husband in divorce court, his wife took in so many roomers, he had to sleep on an improvised bed. So he left her board.
