TUE, DAY, JUNE 1, 1923.

JAPAN IS PLEASED.

Not the least interesting phase of the Chinese banditry incident is the spirit of jubilation with which Japan has acclaimed it.

The Japanese press seems to revel in the thought of China's shame and embarrassment. The Kokumin, alluding to the efforts of the United States and Great Britain to obtain the withdrawal of Japanese troops and postoffices, declares the two English speaking nations "doubtless are disillusioned now." Likewise, the Nichi Nichi expresses the hope that now "the powers will realize their mistake of overconfidence in China." Nearly all the Japanese journals seize upon this occasion to criticise the Pekin government for its obvious weakness. One paper "earnestly urges" the Chinese to put their own house in order before trying to compel others to respect their sovereignty and territorial rights.

The entire Japanese chorus is the outcry of those who have been stung by international disapproval and are now eager to see a portion if that disapproval directed against their "over praised" rival. The hold-up episode is truly unfortunate for China, unless it should convince the Chinese of the necessity of quickly proving their capacity for self-government.

CONCERNING SWINDLERS.

No "blue sky law" has yet been invented that will automatically prevent swindles. We doubt if one can be. A law which did accomplish that result would almost certainly block all legitimate ventures of a speculative nature! and all new ventures are of that nature. So we should have no experimental enterprises; no progress.

Chief Justice Bolster of the municipal court in Boston ruled a few days ago that "broken promises do not make a swindle." That is to say the glowing pictures of profits to be made from an investment may fail of fulfilment and still the company or its salesman may not have intended to deceive. It may have been only a case of "mistaken judgment."

That expression "mistaken judgment" is the stronghold and fortress of intentional swindlers as well as the protection of the unintentional ones. Some of the biggest crooks in the country are still at large because nobody has been able to "get anything on them." It wasn't "mistaken judgment" but deliberate intent to defraud, that brought ruin to credulous persons. But the truth cannot be proved—not until there is some mechanical contrivance for reading men's motives.

The sudden death at Ottawa, on Sunday of Rudolph Boudreau, clerk of the privy council, will occasion deep regret throughout Canada. He was at one time private secretary to the late Sir Wilfrid Laurier and his duties brought him into contact with many people in all parts of Canada. Fredericton as the capital of the province saw much of Mr. Boudreau as he always visited this city when a Lieutenant Governor was sworn in. His last visit was in March last, when he brought from Ottawa the Commission of Lieutenant Governor Todd.

HOW THE NEW BRUNSWICKERS

advantage of the opportunity to present the Club with a portrait of the late Hon. W. E. Gladstone. There were a number of other speakers on the program including representatives of the army and navy as well city, federal and district judges, but as the hour was late they simply arose and bowed their acknowledgements as their names were called. The modus operandi adopted in the case of the tail enders greatly impressed the New Brunswickers and Premier Veniot promised to bring it to the notice of members of the Legislature.

Before the gathering dispersed the chairman announced that the management of the Majestic Theatre had placed four boxes at the disposal of Premier Veniot and his friends for use on the following day. Mayor Curley also announced that the Premier had consented to be present and review a procession of twelve thousand school children on Friday and that a tree would be planted in his honor on Boston common. (This ceremony had to be postponed on account of rain.)

At the conclusion of the luncheon a number of the visitors made their way to the base ball grounds and saw the Boston Red Sox take Cleveland into camp. Others were taken in charge by members of the Canadian Club and showed some of the many points of interest about the city. Members of the party who spent part of the afternoon calling on friends in sky scraping office structures on Boylston, Washington and State Streets were rather struck by the fact that most of the passenger elevators are now operated by ladies with chocolate drop complexions. An enquiry disclosed the fact that they were engaged for this work during the war and had given such satisfaction that they have been able to hold their jobs. A point in their favor is that they are not bothered by would be mashers and are able to attend strictly to business.

An account of the evening meeting together with some observations of the return voyage of the steamer Governor Dingley will have to be reserved for a future article.
