

CLAIMS THAT HIS DAUGHTER'S SQUEEZE BROKE HIS RIBS

Hartford, Feb. 17—The girl who embraced her father so enthusiastically that a bracelet on her wrist fractured one of Dad's ribs must have had considerable experience in petting, David N. Case, chief adjuster for the life, accident and group claims division of the Aetna Insurance Company, told the members of the Men's Club of the company last night.

The effects of the present jazz age and prohibition he said, are beginning to be apparent in a procession of weird insurance accident claims, some of which he mentioned to bear out his contention.

Another policyholder, he said, embraced so violently that he broke his spectacle case. Not all the claims, however, arise in this manner.

A member of a Lion's Club claimed payment of his accident policy because he was bitten by a pet skunk, which a fellow member had brought to a meeting and put on the claimant's lap.

A woman based her claim upon cuts on her foot received from a flask which had fallen in the lobby of a theater from the pocket of a man directly ahead of her.

A man with a quantity of silver dollars in his pocket fell on them while dancing fracturing his hip.

One meek individual was cited who attempted to collect on his policy because "an usher had spoken crossly to him at a gate, causing him to lose weight—and isn't that an accident?"

A golfer wrote to inquire if his policy would protect him while playing golf on Sunday.

The mother-in-law theme crept into the case of a man who disappeared in the West. A mife off shore, at a pleasure resort on an island his clothing and personal articles were found in a bath house. The claims division instituted an investigation to establish proof of death.

"Please stop looking for me will you" said a young man who walked into one of the claims offices soon after. "I didn't disappear with the idea of having my insurance collected. I was only trying to get away from my mother-in-law."

BRITAIN MAY ELECTRIFY ENTIRE RAILWAY SYSTEM

London, Feb. 17—Successful experiments with a new type of electric locomotive which maintains a high speed on a current of only 200 volts has led British electrical engineers to consider the possibility of electrifying the entire railway system of Great Britain.

Voltage High.
Under present conditions 600 volts are required to start a train. The live rails will instantly kill a person coming in contact with them. Under the new system which is the invention of Capt. William P. Durnall a well known London consulting engineer, the same voltage is used that is required for electric fighting purposes and contact with the rail would be no more harmful than shock from an ordinary house lighting circuit.

Moreover it is claimed that the new electric locomotive is much cheaper to run. Where 600 volts are needed to start electric trains at present, once they are underway only 200 volts are required to maintain them at approximately their maximum speed. The report is that the remaining 400 volts are practically wasted.

Capt. Durnall's invention utilized storage batteries to provide the additional voltage required to start the train. This reserve power is gradually and automatically cut off as the train gathers headway. When it is running at top speed the battery current stops entirely and the train runs on the 200 voltage supplied by the live rail. Meanwhile the battery is automatically recharged from the low voltage rail by a transformer.

It is claimed for Capt. Durnall's invention that it dispenses altogether with the need of electrical substations even on long routes. Highly satisfactory tests are declared to have been made with the invention on a specially constructed line near Newcastle.

The invention is viewed with special interest by electrical engineers as its successful tests practically coincide with the passage by Parliament of the new electricity bill providing for the establishment of a $250,000,000 system of super-power electrical stations to transmit power throughout England.

ACCESSORIES, PARIS SAYS,
MUST BE WORN.

All of the important designers have contributed interesting ideas to the fascinating realm of accessories. For the tailored suit O'Rossen has contributed marcasite monograms in pointed effects to be worn on the breast pocket.

Gold link necklaces with bracelets and earrings to match were shown by Champcommunal. In the Groupy, Carotte and Lehouvier openings many scarves were shown to match the frock, Miler Soeurs stressed huge fabric flowers, both at the shoulder and waistline.

Nicole Groult did interesting things with fabric boutonnières, placing them low on suit lapels and high toward the back on dresses. Agnes contributed a new boutonniere in the form of two large pearls surrounded by green foliage. J. Suzanne Talbot stressed the flower at both the waistline and shoulder.

Costume jewelry was widely used. Premet's favorite was two gold necklets, with six small matching bracelets. Chantal contributed many novel feather flowers and many novelty belts, many of them trimmed in shark and reptile skins, made of plaid effects. Jenny stressed the use of modernistic jewelry in black and gold combinations.

In place of the white pearl choker or double strands, Molyneux stressed the use of deep pink and gray pearls with effective clasps of light ruby stones. Philippe de Gaston contributed garters to match the neck ornaments.

Several designers have shown bags made of felts to exactly match the felt hat.

Two tone effects are favored in stockings, the contrasting heel, or the deep toned heel in the lighter toned stockings, being shown. Stockings remain of rather light nude shade with a lavender pinkish, or bluish caste, as the costume demands. Thin black, gray and gun metal shades are to the fore again.

In the realm of gloves the favorite model seems to be the plain pull on, but of fine glazed kid this year, usually to match the stockings exactly. The turn back fancy cuff is definitely passe.
