Washington, May 28—President Coolidge is getting enough presents of animals to keep up the supply at the National Zoological Park. Today he was informed by Bernard Robinson that a baby hippopotamus had been sent him from Liberia. The young hippo is six feet long, three feet high, tips the scales at 600 pounds, and is of a variety seldom seen in this country. It prefers to live chiefly on dry land rather than in water, and takes to the streams mainly when under attack. The President will send the present to the National Zoo.

NEAR ENOUGH.

Modern education was the topic of conversation in the suburban drawing room.

Mrs. Miggs was saying that it was of little use while her hostess Mrs. Biggs held that it was a good thing. "Now here's little George," said the latter. "He's a bright little boy and though only 8 he'll answer any question you like to ask him."

"Well George dear" said Mrs. Miggs "how many are four and seven."

"Twelve" came the prompt reply. "There you are" exclaimed the proud mother "missed it only by two."

What makes reformation hard is that the reformers are not impressive as patterns.
