JUDGE CRATER BELIEVED TO BE IN CAPE BRETON

Sydney, N. S. Sept. 26—Members of the Nova Scotia police in Cape Breton are working on information that is hoped may help to solve the mysterious disappearance of Joseph Force Crater, New York jurist.

Following a report that a man believed to be Judge Crater had been seen during the past week in the Margaree district, the police were told this afternoon that two residents in the vicinity of Ingonis has seen a motorist at Ross Ferry a few days ago whom they could identify from a newspaper photograph and descriptions as the missing jurist. He was driving a powerful green car, and said he was en route to northern Victoria county.

A person thought to be Judge Crater, has been reported at Moncton, N. B., and Halifax on Sept. 8 and Sept. 19, respectively. At the former place he said he was proceeding to Sydney and would probably continue to Newfoundland.

A close check is being made at North Sydney of all passengers embarking recently for Newfoundland.

A NEWSPRINT PRICE CUTTING WAR IS LIKELY

Hamilton, Ont., Sept. 26—Inauguration of a price cutting war and collapse of the newsprint pool is foreseen by F. . Ker, of this city, a member of the Newsprint Committee of the American Newsprint Publishers' Association, as a development in the latest crisis confronting the newsprint industry.

In giving his views to the Canadian Press from the standpoint of the consumer, Mr. Ker declared the resignation of Col. John H. Price, from the presidency of the Newsprint Institute and the secession of the St. Lawrence Corporation, Ltd., as a sympathetic action, foreshadowed "the utter disruption of the newsprint pool and a price-cutting war that will shake the Canadian pulp and paper industry to its very foundation."

"All that has been accomplished for the Canadian industry by Colonel Price and the late Percy Wilson, of Montreal, in conference with the publishers in the early months of this year; all the efforts that Premiers Taschereau and Ferguson have made toward the stabilization of the industry, will go by the board with the collapse of the institute," Mr. Ker said.

"It would seem," he added, "that the industry is at last to be overtaken by the inevitable consequences of overexpansion—a price-cutting war. This nemesis could be avoided only so long as the manufacturers stuck together and observed pooling agreements through which production could be distributed evenly over all the mills in the country."

Col. Price, who, along with Mr. Wilson, had brought comparative order out of chaos last winter and affected a reconciliation between publishers and manufacturers, had resigned. Mr. Ker believed, because of the failure the pooling agreements.

"He caught some of the crew, as it were making off with the only lifeboat," Mr. Ker observed, "and he did just what the publishers would have expected him to do under the circumstances—he brought the facts to light."

COST OF THE LATE SESSION NOT HEAVY

Ottawa, Sept. 26—While the fact that all accounts are not yet paid prevents exact figures being given, the cost of the emergency session of Canada's Parliament may be placed, approximately, at $145,000. This total stands somewhere between the two extremes of $2,000,000 and $95,000 which opponents and advocates of the summoning of Parliament respectively mentioned as the cost before the election.

The lion's share of the $145,000 goes to the members of the senate and Commons in payment for their labors. The 245 commoners and 96 senators who together constitute Parliament collected $375 each for the 15 days the session lasted. The remuneration is at the rate of $25 per day.

House printing, including the publication of the Hansard debates, cost between $6,000 and $7,000. In addition there was the payment of the sessional staff. It includes 80 stenographers, 20 messengers, 32 temporary police, 86 charwomen, 32 men cleaners, 18 pages, and six private messengers for the ministers. The payroll of this force runs close to $1,000 per day, and adds another $15,000 to the cost of the session.

NEW COAT OF GOLD ON ST. PAUL'S CROSS

London, Sept. 27—The work of regilding the great cross atop the dome of St. Paul's Cathedral has been completed. The task required three weeks and the men who are employed to do the regilding worked 370 feet above the street level.

Before the gold leaf could be applied the cross was given a thorough cleansing to remove the dirt and grime that has accumulated in the 17 years that have elapsed since the last work was done on it.

The gold was stored in a secret hiding place in the vaults beneath the cathedral, known to only a few of the trusted cathedral staff.

The gold is pure 24-carat leaf exactly like that which with the Egyptians adorned their mummies 4,000 years ago.

This gold beaten by craftsmen in the world's largest gold-beating works, off Tottenham Court road, and experts predict it will defy London's fog and dirt for half a century more.

Three thousand leaves of this pure gold were used to re-cover the cross and its ball and also the pine-apples of the western towers.

Before they started work each morning, the workmen stuffed their pockets with enough gold leaves to last them till sunset.

The Marysville Fishway

There is a big run of salmon in the Nashwaak River at the present time but they appear to fight shy of the new fishway lately constructed near the waste gates of the dam. Fishery Inspector Harrison has a tray set just beyond the fishway and so far he has caught one grilse. An engineer of the Department of Fisheries is expected here on Monday to make an inspection of the fishway.
