INQUEST INTO DEATH OF YOUNG DICKENSON AT CAMPBELL SETT. FEATURES PROSECUTOR'S SATIRE

A verdict that young Erbon Dickenson had been killed by a bullet from a gun in the hands of Harvey Dunlop, 53-year-old farmer recluse, was brought in by the jury at Campbell Settlement on Saturday afternoon. Dunlop, is now in the York County Jail, facing a charge of murder.

It took the jury only 25 minutes to bring in the verdict.

"The death of Dickenson amounted to the shooting of a boy in cold blood—in the midst of a civilized country," said C. L. Dougherty, crown prosecutor, who summed up the evidence of six witnesses heard in the inquest.

The little hall in which the inquest was held was crowded, and the spectators sat silently while the witnesses pieced together the story of how Dunlop shot Erbon Dickenson because he believed the boy had jeered at him, returned to his barn, and then finished unloading some hay, as though nothing had happened.

Fought Tears

Twelve-year old Darrell Dickenson strove to fight back tears as he described the manner in which his brother died. He had been riding on a load of hay with Erbon Thursday night, when the shooting was done. It was about 6.30. Erbon was driving. As they approached Dunlop's house they stopped to rest the horses, which had just climbed a steep hill, and to let Dowie Stairs, another boy, off the wagon, Darrell said.

He saw Dunlop come out of his shack, and heard him shout something that sounded like, "What are you fellows hollerin' about." They had been shouting at the horses and singing. Darrell did not hear what Erbon answered, but he heard Dunlop say, "You're not going to holler any more, are you."

Aimed and Fired

Erbon answered something back and it sounded like, "I don't know, Harvey," Darrell testified. [He then saw Dunlop, he said, lean against the corner of his shack, aim his gun and fire.

Erbon hunched down in the hay when he was struck. The frightened horses started to gallop off, overturning the load of hay. Darrell jumped off as the load overturned, he said, and then he saw Erbon stand up. He noticed blood on his shirt. Darrell rushed up the road to Frankie Dunham's house and asked Mrs. Dunham to call a doctor. While he was there, Marshall Dickenson and Hilliard Stairs came up the road with Erbon between them. Erbon could not walk very well. They laid him on the grass in front of Dunham's.

Dowie Stairs, who was riding on the wagon with Erbon and Darrell, told a similar story. He said, though, that as they were driving the horses up the hill and shouting at them to make them trot, he saw Dunlop run from the field in which he had been haying into his shack. He was not carrying a gun then but when the wagon came abreast of the shack and they stopped to let the horses get their wind Dunlop was at the corner of the shack with his gun in his hands.

"Hollered Enough"

After Erbon had told Dunlop that he didn't know whether he was going to holler any more, Dunlop replied, "You are not going to holler any more". Then he fired, Dowie said. He described how he jumped from the wagon and he saw Dunlop aiming the gun, and said that after the shooting he had seen the man go back to finish his having.

Marshall Dickenson, a second brother of the shooting victim, and Hilliard Stairs, who was riding on a load of hay a few yards behind that on which Erbon and Darrell Dickenson and Dowie Stairs were riding, told practically the same story.

Heard Report

They had seen the three youngsters stop their horses to let them get their wind after climbing the hill. Then they heard the report of a gun and saw the team in front of them gallop off, running around a mail box and upsetting the load. Erbon fell off the right side of the load as it toppled. Then he rose and staggered around to the left of the wagon, the side Dunlop's house was on. They helped him to Frankie Dunham's gateway and laid him on the grass. He died as they laid him down. As they had reached Erbon, they noticed Dunlop standing at the corner of his shack working with his gun. They believed he was reloading it.

Others on Stand

The other witnesses were Senior Constable Garnet Vail, who was in charge of the investigation for provincial police, and Dr. J. G. Owens, of Hawshaw, who performed the post mortem. Constable Vail told of how he and Constable David Evans arrested Dunlop and how Dunlop had boasted that had he seen in his shack, where his firearms were, by then, he could have done them some harm. They (Vail and Evans) and found two old Mauser rifles and an antiquated revolver in the shack. He was on his way from the barn to the shack as they arrested him.

Dr. Owens described the nature of the wound which caused the boy's death. The bullet had entered his neck and emerged through his right shoulder.

Dr. M. L. Jewett was the coroner and the jury was as follows: Vernon Grass, Wetmore Bates, Daniel Schriver, foreman, and Gordon Stairs.

Young Dickenson's funeral here today was the largest funeral this community has seen. Hundreds of people, many of whom had travelled miles to attend, paid their last respects to the boy who was shot and killed.

Not more than a third of the crowd was able to get in the church. Three clergymen, Rev. Wellington Shaw, of Andover; Rev. Hedley Bragdon, of Woodstock, and Rev. Fred Bragdon, of Meductic, officiated. Four cousins of the deceased, Morris Bragdon, Laurel Bragdon, Eric McElwaine and Theodore Fox, acted as pallbearers.

slowly wended its way to rural cemetery, where interment was made in the family lot. Dr. Warren Maxwell assisted by members of the order, read the K. of P. burial service at the grave, and Rev. Dr. Camp offered prayers.

A striking tribute to the popularity and worth of the deceased was the large number of beautiful floral tributes. Seldom if ever has such a wonderful floral display been seen at a funeral in this city and it taxed the accommodation of four large automobiles to transport them from the house to the cemetery.

Pall Bearers

The pall bearers furnished by the K. of P. were as follows:

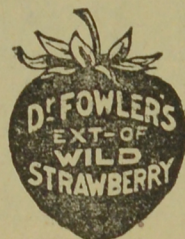

Murray Hagerman, Sheriff Hawthorne, Walter Burden, Gordon Foster, Hedley Forbes, Walter MacKay.

Following is the list of chief mourners:

station of his energetic campaign. His rival J. J. F. Winslow, the Liberal Sacrifice is at the County Court house here. There appear to be little activity shown by the Liberals.

The first returns of the election are expected to be received by seven o'clock, with the radio, telephone, wires doing their share later in bringing in entire results from all over the province and the Dominion.

The entire list of returning officers in the city of Fredericton are as follows: Fred I. Haviland, Herbert Gunter, Cecil Holder, R. B. VanDine, Peter Farrell, Charles H. Weddall, Howard Young, F. L. Cooper, C. L. Sypher, John S. Scott, Herbert J. Maxwell, Hibbert Simonds, F. P. Lister, Frank Lingley, McDonald Young, Royden Colter, Arthur Limerick. The Devon and Marysville booths today correspond to this city as regards activity, neither showing the same interest manifest at the provincial polling.

William Keenan arrived here from Ottawa on Saturday to attend the funeral of his father-in-law, Harry W. Walker.
