Early today Mrs. Drake, with her little girl, set out from the north end of the city to walk to the home of her father, Samuel Purcell, on a branch road off the Dutch Village highway. Late this afternoon she reached there, in a distraught condition.

While passing through a thickly wooded stretch of road, said Mrs. Drake, she had suddenly become weak and had laid down under the trees. on included W. F. Anderson, Hugh John Flemming, H. H. Hatfield and Anson Margison, Alexander Strong presided.

While the delegates were considering the ticket, the meeting was addressed by B. Frank Smith. Mr. Smith defended the record of the present Government and denied that they had increased the public debt to the extent claimed by the Opposition. There was, he said, a little more than a million of increase in the net debt. The total bonded debt had risen considerably more than that but there were, he said, assets to offset this.

The Government, Mr. Smith said, had been charged with giving away Grand Falls. It was not Baxter, he declared, who had given Grand Falls away but Veniot. He had given it away for $60,000 and tried to buy it back for $1,200,000. Grand Falls had been saved for the people, he continued by Baxter and an era of industrial development unexampled in the history of New Brunswick had been ushered in.

On Liquor Question

Turning to the liquor question, Mr. Smith said that the Conservatives had given New Brunswick prohibition and that the following year the Murray Government had been turned out of office. Then he charged prohibition had been discredited by the Liberals during the years that followed. Dr. Baxter, on his taking office, had found an impossible situation. The law could not be administered. At the same time the province had been brought to the verge of direct taxation. The premier had then brought in his control measure.

M. L. Hayward said that the Government supporters were having it thrown in their teeth that the Pre-

Rev. Mr. Giberson, of Bath, spoke briefly, saying that he was against the Isae of liquor, but would support the Government, as he did not believe that the Opposition would improve the situation. Rev. Mr. Hatfield, of Bristol, also gave a short address in similar vein.

The report of the nominating committee was then announced and Mr. Squires was called and addressed the meeting.
