FINDS THAT WOMEN ARE SLEEPY SEX

New York, June 6—Women have a stronger desire to lay in bed mornings after awakening than men have, according to Dr. Donald A. Laird of Colgate University, who has been conducting studies for a New York hotel concerning the sleeping habits of its guests. Four out of every five women do not feel like getting out of bed when they wake up, he reported in his survey made public today.

On the other hand men have more difficulty in getting to sleep when they retire, and men past 40 years when they visit New York as a rule stay up later than they do at home. Men under 35, however, retire one hour earlier on the average when spending time in the city than they do when in their own homes.

Miss Winnifred Blair, St. John, who will be remembered as the winner of the "Miss Canada" contest a few years ago, was united in marriage at St. John yesterday to Harold R. Drummie, barrister at law. She wore white satin slippers with tiny sprays of orange blossoms at the sides, and carried calla lilies.

Mrs. Douglas G. R. Fowler, matron of honor, wore a dainty frock of white chiffon figured in shades of orchid and heliotrope, fashioned with gracefully-flared skirt and short puff sleeves. Her hat was of orchid mohair with band of figured chiffon. She wore matching slippers and carried sweetpeas in shades of orchid.

Bridal Reception

The bride and groom left on a wedding trip to Upper Canadian cities. Upon their return they will spend the summer at Renforth where they have taken a cottage for the season. For traveling the bride wore a tailored suit of navy covert cloth, having the new shoulder cape effect, and a blouse of eggshell crepe made in simple lines with short cape sleeves.
