LIKES OF A GENIUS

One does not have to be a genius to appreciate the preferences of Thomas A. Edison. The public has an opportunity to learn of him now that Mrs. Edison is puoted on the subje ctof a magazine article.

Mr. Edison wishes the privilege of being the first in the household to open the newspaper in its unrumpled and orderly state. We non-geniuses would like to have that same priority.

The inventor has his own special easy chair over which he has absolute sovereignty and right of undivided-occupancy. There is not one among the non-celebrities who has not had that hope after the household has passed through the crisis of paying for a really comfortable chair for the fireside. But it was just a hope.

The wizard of Menlo Park does not remember birthdays anniversaries or special days. We lesser lights who are tormented by the fear we shall muff the remembrance of one of these occasions can only wish to emulate the genius in having no fielding average at all for the big days within the family.

The maker of the incandescent lamp does not write letters. He doesn't even answer letters. We of the unsung throngs of humanity know our epistles are the kind which must be answered before the 10th. But our impulses are those of the genius.

But in one thing we non-gifted ones stand not craven but courageously independent. We wouldn't wear an Edison silk nightshirt.

The "Lunatic Fringe"

The Independent Labor bloc controls comparatively few votes in the House of Commons, but these are enough, in the present nice balance of parties, to cause the Government some perturbation. Even if the thirty members who acknowledge the leadership of Mr. Maxton did not all desert it on a critical division, its strength would be seriously impaired and its continuance in office would be more than ever dependent upon Liberal support. The congress which has just ended at Buckingham hae taken sharp issue with the policies which the I. L. P. does not regard as representative of the ideals of Socialism, and has come out openly for more radical leadership.

On the last day Mr. Snowden came in for bitter criticism because his budget did not attempt to compel the transfer of wealth by drastic taxation. The congress went so far as to demand a tax of 100 per cent. on the larger estates, with confiscation when the owners die. This may seem logical to the extremists, but the English people, including the majority of the Socialists among them, are not prepared to go this length. And the I. L. P. is so keen for further expenditures on "social welfare" that it may be doubted if any form of taxation could supply the funds.

PRAISE

When Daniel Willard, president of the B. & O., wrote a letter to an engineer some years ago praising him for the steady handling of his locomotive and the smooth ride, Mr. Willard probably forgot about the letter the next day. But it was a kindness worth doing and like so many other little acts of thoughtfulness and courtesy keeps on paying dividends.

Not long ago this engineer told somebody that since he had received that letter he had always tried to handle his train just as though President Willard's car were on the rear end every trip.

LIKING THE MUD

There is a lot of difference between the fellow who falls down, gets up, brushes the mud off his coat and goes on, and the fellow who likes the mud. There is always much hope for the man who is sorry. The man who isn't sorry is about ready to be checked off as a total loss.

Chief Justice Meredith of Ontario in a recent interview declared that five judges of the Ontario Supreme Court had not done a hand's turn in a year. This is a pretty strong statement and we can hardly accept it as correct. Possibly the judges in question may not have performed any judicial duties for a year, but it is dollars to doughnuts that some of them were at work on a scheme to get their salaries increased.

President Hoover addressing the United States Chamber of Commerce a few nights ago at Washington in referring to the October crash in the stock market, expressed the opinion that such a thing could not occur again. A New York despatch on Saturday made it quite clear that the president, still has a few things to learn about the stock market. Wall Street on Saturday perienced the most frenzied dry since last October.

The boot and shoe trade of Canada has suffered from the British preference and the budget proposals of the Finance Minister hold out no hope for an improvement. The duty on footwear has not been changed, which means that British manufacturers will continue to ship their goods to British Columbia via the Panama Canal and undersell Canadian competitors.

A number of items in Finance Minister Dunning's budget, which have been placed on free list under the perferential tariff have never been imported from the Old Country in the past and will not likely be in the future.

The budget debate will be resumed in the House on Tuesday. No doubt the government will be told in plain language that in dealing with agricuultural imports from the United States it has stolen the clothes of the Opposition.

The civil resistance campaign of Gandhi in India has at last landed him in jail. This is exactly what the Mahatma has been looking for.

For the seventh time, the Boston Athletic Association marathon has been won by Clarence De Mar, one of the older models.
