MISS CARR IS ORDERED HELD BY CORONER MOREHOUSE WHEN INQUEST ADJOURNED

Four Witnesses Gave Evidence Last Evening in Clark Murder Case—A Solution of the Mystery Not Yet Found—Postponement Until This Evening.

After ordering that Miss Isabel Carr star witness, be held in custody until resumption of the inquest into the death of Mrs. Elizabeth Clark, Coroner O. E. Morehouse last evening made adjournment until Saturday night on the motion of C. L. Dougherty, Clerk of Peace. A large and rather restless crowd jammed the court room at the police station and banked the windows, creating some disturbance which was promptly quelled by police officials. A crowd had gathered about the court room an hour before the doors were thrown open.

Witnesses Heard

Four witnesses were called and between them pieced together a detailed frame for the crime although no definite motive or clue has emerged from examination to date. C. L. Dougherty, in question Dr. G. C. VanWart, who made an examination of the body, did not ask his opinion on the probable motive of the crime as revealed by a study of the wounds and blood coagulation. So far there has been nothing to coincide the maid's exit from the house between 12.30 and 1.00 with the occurrence of the crime.

Again no evidence has been produced to say definitely that Mrs. Clark had money in the purse found by her body. This evidence will be forthcoming, it is expected from a late witness.

Allowed To Go

The Carr girl's boy friend, Barry McHattan was allowed his freedom by the coroner. The young man was straight forward in his evidence after a reluctant beginning and seems in no way incriminated. The girl had taken him into the Clark home about 3 o'clock and together they found the murdered woman lying in a pool of blood. A bloody towel under her head. He supplied other details corroborated by officials. The most significant part of his testimony told of their return to 531 Brunswick St. the evening of the crime. Miss Carr took pieces of jewelry, pictures and other personal belongings from a bureau drawer as though intending to pack and leave. She seemed at great pains to set things to rights and made a frantic search for a tablecloth.

Conjecture is rife that the towel found by the murdered woman, was taken from the same bureau drawer which Miss Carr was at such pains to set to rights, but this is rather unfair to the young lady who has as yet had no opportunity to tell her story.

The following witnesses were called in succession:—Dr. G. V. VanWart, Barry McHattan, Constable Kenneth Foster, Chief of Police Nathaniel Jones.

Dr. G. C. VanWart

Dr. VanWart said he had made an examination of the body of Mrs. Clark between three and five o'clock on the afternoon of the 7th. The patient was lying on the floor in the summer kitchen, quite unconscious, but still alive. cursory examination showed death due to two fractures in the head, one of them definitely opening into the skull. The left side of the head and cheek were badly bruised. The head was matted with blood. A post mortem revealed several other slight fractures and a semi-circular cut at the back of the skull. Mrs. Clark did not regain consciousness while under examination. In the doctor's opinion death was due to injury of the cerebellum caused by the blow of a heavy, blunt instrument.

Barry McHattan

McHattan stated he had boarded since Christmas at Gorman's Hotel, Queen Street. At the outset he showed obduracy in answering. He did not know the deceased or her house number. It was twenty-five minutes to three when he entered the house where Isabel Carr was employed. He had met the girl some minutes before in front of the Goody Shop. They had bought some parcels at a Regent St. store. The two went out to the Brunswick Street house. They found the doors unlocked, although Miss Carr distinctly remembered locking them before leaving. They heard heavy breathing, and hurrying to the outside kitchen they found Mrs. Clark lying on the floor. "Someone has been here and killed Mrs. Clark," the girl cried. ter Clark, son of the murdered woman. ter Clark, Son of the murdered woman.

A hatchet lay beside Mrs. Clark and when produced in court McHattan identified the exhibit.

A towel was lying beside her head. McHattan stated. There were blood-stains on the towel and on the face and head of the victim.

Returned in Evening

In the evening, McHattan continued, the girl returned to Mrs. Clark's house between six and seven o'clock. The girl took some of her belongings from a trunk including some jewelry. McHattan said he thought the girl was hunting about for a tablecloth. They remained in the house about twenty minutes.

Policeman Foster

Policeman Foster said he had responded to a telephone from Walter Clark about three o'clock and went to the house accompanied by Chief of Police Jones. Walter Clark, McHattan and Miss Carr were in the room beside the elderly lady who lay on the floor. She was battered about the head. The Chief of Police and Foster made an examination of the room and premises. They found an axe lying on the floor about three feet to the right of the body. A black purse lay near the axe, and was empty.

A blood-stained towel and rag lay close to the head. A pillow speckled with blood, was found on a settee in the kitchen. The blood stain was more pronounced on the right side of the pillow. There was more blood on the couch.

When making the examination McHattan and Miss Carr came to the door accompanied by Mrs. Annie Mathewson. Constable Vail was in the dining room at the time. The two officers examined the back yard but found nothing. Miss Carr indicated her room to Constable Foster. She was moaning and crying when the nurse, Miss Parsons, arrived. Vail and Foster left on a wild goose chase up the Woodstock road. No suspect was arrested at this time.

Chief Jones

On arriving at 531 Brunswick St. Chief of Police Jones said that he first saw McHattan standing at the top of the stairs and passing him he went to the outside kitchen where he found Mrs. Clark. She was breathing but her pulse beat was not distinguishable said the Chief. Mr. Clark came in and stooping over the lady cried "Mother, speak to me." She showed no sign of recognition or response. Shortly after Dr. VanWart came in and made an examination. The Chief and Inspector Stokoe laid Mrs. Clark on a bed in an adjoining room. It was then shortly after three o'clock.

An investigation of the premises was futile. About 3.20 o'clock Mrs. Mathewson told Chief Jones that Mrs. Clark was dead. Shortly after the Coroner, Dr. Morehouse, arrived, and ordered the Chief to empanel a jury. A joint examination showed that between the two pools of blood there were marks that indicated a dragging of the body across the floor or a struggle to change position. Blood was spattered on the wall and ceiling. The Chief said that the blood bore evidence of being scraped as though by a boot, although there were no distinct footprints. There was no evidence of any hurried cleaning up being made by the culprit, Chief Jones stated as he left the stand.

ed and censured severely. Neither culprit is connected with "York County's most atrocious crime."

Nones Detained

Inspector John Bird in charge of the investigation for the N. B. Provincial Police, stated this morning that reports have come from several parts of the province of men having been questioned when their appearance warranted suspicion. None however, were detained. Constable Pettigrew, of Woodstock stopped and quizzed a man last night, who was wandering along the Woodstock Road.

Meanwhile in the city, the course of the law continues with the completion of the inquest into Mrs. Clark's death tonight at the Police station. The inquest will start at seven o'clock.

Star Witness

Isabel Carr, maid at the Clark home, is being detained and will be the star witness tonight. Others who will be on the stand will be C. W. Clark, only son of the deceased, Constable Vail and Inspector Stokoe, the latter two of the Provincial Police.

On the strength of evidence given by Barry McHattan, friend of Miss Carr, at last night's hearing, her testimony tonight is expected to furnish some real contemplative matter.
