THE WOMEN OF JAPAN ARE NOW FAIRLY PROGRESSIVE; H ADVANCED IN LATE

"The only method of uplifting the native people is the uplifting of woman," says a dispatch for The Hague to the Christian Science Monitor.

This is the keynote of the native women's movement in the Dutch East Indies, with its native population of nearly 50,000,000 people, of whom eighty-six per cent. are of hamadan while there are 750,000 Christians, eleven per cent. of whom are Roman Catholics.

The marked progress of the women's movement in the Dutch East Indies during the last twenty years, is very extraordinary because, especially in the Island of Java with its 40,000,000 inhabitants the Mohammedan religions as well as the deep-rooted "adat" or tradition seemed to present almost insurmountable difficulties.

The women's movement in the Dutch East Indies started about the year 1910. Another remarkable point is that this democratic native women's movement was started in the Dutch East Indies by young women belonging to the Javanese nobility. These members of the aristocracy enjoyed the privilege of a Western education, which made them realize the position of the native women as undignified and in all respects inferior to man, having no rights, only duties like a slave.

Women Practically Prisoners

Before 1910 women from the highest Javanese circles were practically imprisoned in the "kraton" (palace) of native noblemen of prince) and they were not allowed to show themselves to the outer world or to members of the other sex before the day of their marriage.

Some twenty years ago a courageous young native woman "Raden" (princess Kartini, daughter of a former Regent of Japara, who had been educated along Western lines) embodied the results of her reflections on the position of the native woman in letters. Even this relatively woman did not dare to sever the ties of the deep-rooted "adat" which forbade her to openly voice her new ideas and thereby claim equal rights for native women. Only after her decease at a very early age were her letters published.

A second example of the emancipation which struck root in the hearts of aristocratic women is the case of the ladies of the court of a small principality in the territory of Djocjakarta (Java, namely the princess of the House of Pakoelaam).

Governed By Prince

This principality was governed by a very progressive prince who broke

TALKIES CUT THE SALARIES OF SOME STARS

Hollywood, May 1—Since the coming of the talking pictures salaries of many leading stars of the films have taken quite a tumble, according to reports. Some of the stars who commanded big weekly payments have not been seen quite so often in pictures. Whether this means that the salary was cut off or not is certain in all cases.

Colleen Got $12,500

Colleen Moore, for instance, was reputed to have a salary of $12,500 a week. But she has just rolled up more than six months without making a picture. Such salaries, it is said, are now rare.

Tom Mix used to get a $15,000 a week, according to report. But the company, that had him on the payroll now has a top of $5000, except in rare instances. Laura La Plante was a high salaried star and it is believed that this had much to do with her parting from the company, which had her on the payroll.

Others who severed connections with companies for salary reasons, it is said, are Reginald Denny, Jack Mulhall and Florence Vidor.

Babe Daniels and Richard Dix are among the exceptions. They left their old companies, but signed at higher salaries with another.
