Would Wake Up With Smothering Spells.

There is nothing that brings with it such a fear of impending death as to wake up in the night with that awful sense of smothering. The terrible smothering, choking up and sinking feeling is caused by the heart and nerves being in a deranged condition, and calls for prompt relief.

Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills are the only remedy that can give prompt relief and effect a complete cure in all cases of such severity.

They strengthen and invigorate the heart, tone up the nervous system, and the trouble which is the cause of so much fear and anxiety becomes a thing of the past.

Mrs. Wm. McElwain, Temperance Vale, N.B., writes: "I am not much of a believer in medicines, but I must say Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills are all right. Some years ago I was troubled with smothering spells. In the night I would be sound asleep, but would wake up with my breath all gone, and think I would never get it back again. I was telling a friend of my trouble, and he advised me to use Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills.
He also gave me a box which I tried, and I had only taken a few of them when I could sleep all night without any trouble.
I did not finish the box until some years later, when I felt my trouble coming back. I took the rest and they have cured me entirely."

50c per box, 3 boxes for $1.25, at all dealers or mailed direct by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

Molly Beamish

Always, when Mr. Jerningham was broken at piquet, or died out, or recovering from the effects of a carouse, or otherwise made miserable his mainstay had been woman. A pretty girl to lean on, a pretty girl to kiss, a pretty girl to put her cool white hand on his aching brow; this had been his pick-me-up, and tonic.

It was so now.

On a little bank covered with ferns they sat down. Mrs. Jerningham took the hand of his companion and caressed it; then he sighed.

"Let us forget kissing," said he, kissing her fingers as he spoke.
"Sophie, I am ruined. Nay, do not take it to heart, dear one; 't is all I deserved. Ruined!"

"Ruined?" said the Guinea Girl in a tentative tone.

"Aye, ruined."

Sophie's little soft face flushed, but her little mouth—and what a little soft-hard mouth it was—did not alter in shape, though she caught her breath back.

"Now, 'fore gad, if you cry about it, you will make me the most miserable wretch alive. Sophie, I am pursued. One Mufton, a fat-headed macaroni of these parts, driving in his chaise and pair last night, had the horseback, penniless. More to see ill-luck to fall in with me and I on how the thing was done than to do it, I stopped his coach and took his purse."

Miss Shrimpton, who at the word "ruin" had caught her breath, now withdrew her hand and rose to her feet.

"Mr. Jerningham," said she, "I must leave you. My father would not wish me to hear these things."

"But stay. Directly I had done so I repented of the deed and what did I do but fling his purse back into the carriage and ride off!"

He expected her to laugh, but she did not.

"I do not want to hear more," said Miss Shrimpton.

She had suddenly assumed the manner of a proper, middle-aged person. Had she taken out her little frozen heart and shown it to him in her hand, he could not have been much more astonished. She half turned away.

"I know nothing of these things, and wish to know nothing. We will not discuss them."

"But stay," he said again. "You can surely understand—it was more folly than fault, and, again, the thing was over in a flash. I just took his purse and flung it at his ugly head."

"Sir," said she, "I must leave you.
I am but a girl and know nothing of these things. Nay, if you attempt to molest me, I shall call."

He had put out his hand to detain her, but he drew it hastily back and stood, mute and gazing at, with a little curtsy, she turned and vanished, walking towards the house.

And she had been so chill-like and soft and sweet but a few moments ago!

Then he remembered Molly Beamish—the girl he had forgotten for this doll.

Half an hour later he was lying by the wood edge in sight of the road, white of face and chewing the cud of his folly.

It could not be more than four o'clock and there were still five mortal hours before the coach of the Marchioness of Blagdon was likely to pass. Five mortal hours—a proper punishment.

VI.

Miss Beamish, at that moment, was flying about the house, making with one hand preparations for departure on the morrow and with the other hand preparations for her toilet in the evening.

In a big cowskin-covered trunk papered with sprigged paper on the inside she was packing her dresses, kneeling to the task, whilst Rose Cowslip stood by to assist.

"My china silk," said Molly—"I will wear that this evening. There, place it on the bed. 'T will go admirably with my pearls. Are they real? Hla, child, what questions you do ask! Here, take hold. Lud! What are these? A pair of Sir Patrick's stockings! I remember now; I put them amidst my dresses to darn. Oh my poor head! 'T is aching with all the things I have to remember.
There, I forgot—this trunk has no hasp to the lock."

Miss Beamish sat back on her heels, a beautiful picture of distracted contemplation, gazing, with purs-ed lips, at the half-packed trunk and the defective lock, while Rose Cow-slip, who reflected all her mistress's moods like a cheap mirror, stood by with an expression of consternation on her face.

"No matter; we can cord it. There, close your mouth and don't stand gaping like a zany. Give me that shoe—and where's the other? Look under the bed. . . . Then, 't is under the couch. . . . Then, 't is lost. Oh, lud! who would be a mistress with such a houseful of servants, half of them run off and the rest with no eyes! There you go glubbering! Was there ever such a child! And there's the shoe in the corner, staring into your face."

She packed the shoes, silent now, but furiously ruminating. Then she broke out:
"What are you to say?"

"And when the Marchioness arrives
"Good evening, my lady."

Miss Beamish, carefully folding a petticoat and placing it in the trunk, continued:
"Yes, go on."

"Will your ladyship step—"

"Yes?"

"Will your ladyship step—?"

"Into the drawing-room." Have you no brains! Now say it all over again."

-Woman's Column-

MUSINGS OF A MODERN MAID

The quickest and surest way for a man to get his mind off a woman is to marry her.

After 29 an unmarried girl stops hoping and struggling to find her "Ideal," becomes absolutely neutral, and puts her faith in preparedness.

Fireproof buildings, holeproof hosiery, and waterproof coats are among the marvels of the age, but why has nobody yet had the brilliancy to invent a foolproof marriage contract?

Any girl with a little intuition and a little experience can distinguish between a sentimental "connoisseur" and a mere scalp "collector" by the way in which a man kisses her the very first time.

"Short measure." What a man tells the doctor about his habits; what a woman tells the jury about her age, what a husband tells his wife about his avocations, and what the average man tells a woman about anything.

Even when a girl doesn't believe all the things a man tells her about himself, she can't help admiring him for having the brilliant imagination to invent them.

The days may be getting longer, but somehow that never seems to make a man less anxious to improve them by stringing them out through three-quarters of the night.

NEW FOOT FADS.

The many women who have objected to the daringly short skirt have finally adopted it, but only since the advent of the high boot, so that now they complacently wear skirts that are a good 8 inches from the ground, and it must be confessed that not only are they most comfortable, but decidedly youthful looking, which is an advantage that is not to be lightly set aside.

But what is milady of the modest mien to do for evening? She is so wedded now to the abbreviated skirt and its charms that for evening she still desires to wear lacy affairs that are quite as short, and what is bothering her more is that they appear so much shorter with the dainty evening slippers.

She was really in despair until some ingenious person originated two lace ruffles that are to be attached to the silken stockings. With a scalloped skirt and dark slippers there is a quant appeal that takes one back to the pictures of grandmother when grandfather was courting her.

DICTATES OF FASHION.

Brocade evening shoes always have a definite charm.

Coats of the new cream fabric promise to be popular.

Very soft woollens seem to be in favor for spring skirts.

Dainty robes of embroidered flounceing are again in vogue.

Long transparent sleeves are often used for tulle theatre frocks.

Black velvet is said to be as universally becoming as blue serge.

The inexpensive evening wrap can be made rich by velvet trimming.

Becomingness and style are indispensable nowadays for motor coats.

Leather belts and trimmings are a feature of many sport suits.

Tucks on the new chiffon dresses are run with ribbon of a contrasting color.

Picot edged taffeta as well as taffeta pinked as to edges forms a substitute for the inevitable fur trimming.

TEA AND COFFEE STAINS.

Old tea and coffee stains are sometimes extremely obstinate and require great pains to remove. Wet the stains in cold water, then soak them in pure glycerine, wash out in lukewarm water and iron on the wrong side until dry.
Or mix one tablespoonful of salt with a cup of soft soap, rub on the spots, and lay the articles on the grass or in the sun to bleach. Wet the spots occasionally. The natural bleaching power of the sun will often fade out coffee or tea spots if subjected to it for a considerable length of time.

LONG GLOVES AGAIN.

Smart women are wearing gloves with a long wrist, which is brought up cuff-like over the sleeve. White is the preferred color, but gray and delicate tan and also dark blue are seen.

NEW NECKBANDS.

The newest thing in neckbands is the small black silk cord from which hangs a jeweled pendant. These may also be used as veil fasteners, placing the cord and pendant over the veil.
