Tobacco Heart
CURED BY
Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills.

Tobacco does not seem to affect all alike. Many men enjoy their smoke, live to a good old age, and apparently suffer no ill effects from the use of the weed.

There are others, though, on whose heart and nervous system tobacco produces the most serious results.
It causes palpitation, pain in the heart and irregularity of its beat, makes the hands tremble, sets the nerves on edge, and the breath becomes short.

To counteract this demoralizing influence on the heart and nerves there is no remedy that equals Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills.

They make the heart beat strong and steady, restore tone and vigor to the nerves, and remove all the evil results caused by the tobacco.

Mr. Nelson Young, Brampton, Ont., writes: "I have had, up to about a month ago, a very weak heart, which I suppose came from smoking cigarettes.
When I heard of Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills as a cure, I immediately gave up smoking, and started using them.
It does you justice to be the founder of such a great remedy. They made me feel like a new man."

Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills are 50c per box, 3 boxes for $1.25, at all dealers or mailed direct on receipt of price by The T. Milburn Co., Limited,

Miss Phoenix

"I was on my way down-town to see Ethel, my sister, who lives in Chicago. She and her husband are stopping at the Holland House. I met Jack on Fifth Avenue and we walked along together. I wanted to stop at the hotel a moment, so I let Jack go along with me. Ethel insisted upon my bringing him up—and I was never more mortified in all my life. She asked us into the worst looking room you ever saw. Her clothes and her husband's were scattered all over the place. It was a pig pen! To make matters worse the first thing Jack did, in trying to find a place to sit down, was to upset a bottle of shoe polish all over his coat. He had on one of those light gray, soda-water suits, you know."

"Clever of Jack," commented
Townsend.

"Very. Of course I had to take off my gloves and get to work on that spot with benzine. Just then Fred, Ethel's husband, telephoned from down town that they must leave on the limited tonight and told her to go right down to the office and see about the trunks and about getting berths and all that sort of thing, as he would not have time. So she rushed out, leaving Jack and me in the room."

"Fine!" observed Townsend.
"Fine nothing!" retorted Laura.
"Ethel must have stayed down in that old office for half an hour.
Meantime, you can see a picture of Jack Gray wandering about the place in his shirt-sleeves and me sitting on the bed in this wilderness of wearing apparel, scrubbing his coat!"
"How beautifully domestic!"

"Just so. Suddenly the door opens and a fat old party flops into the room. Thought it was his room, you know. They let him off on the wrong floor, apparently. He started to apologize, and then all of a sudden he rushed up to Jack, grabbed him by the hand, and shouted, 'Why, Jack Gray, I'm glad to see you!'"

"Who the duce was it?"

"Jack introduced him as Colonel Crosby."

"Old Crosby! Why, of course! He always stops at the Holland."
"You know him, too?"
"Certainly. I've known him for years. He's the original jolly old Montana millionaire. He usually drops in to see me when he's in town.
But what on earth did you do then?"
"Oh, Jack stammered and flushed like a Dutch bride. But the old fellow did not seem to notice his embarrassment. He just looked at me and said, 'I suppose this is your wife, Jack, and, coming over to me, 'I am very glad to meet you, Mrs.
Gray.'"

"Elegant!" shouted Townsend, bursting into peals of appreciative laughter. "Elegant!"

"My dear Harry, that is all very well; we might still have gotten out of it then and there. But that idiot Jack got completely rattled, and actually introduced me as his wife!"

Townsend bowed over the table in mock solemnity.

"Mrs. Gray—delighted, I'm sure."

"You may be sure I was not delighted! And then Jack launched into a long explanation as to why we were stopping at the Holland House—having our house redecorated and all that sort of rot—and was getting beautifully tangled up when the old gentleman proposed that we dine with him at the Ritz this evening. He would not listen to a refusal. So Jack and I, as Mr. and Mrs.
Gray, are to take dinner in public with Colonel Crosby."

"But surely you don't dream of doing such a thing!" exclaimed Townsend.

"Of course not. To accept was the easiest way out. I told Jack he'd have to break the date over the phone, late this afternoon. He's almost delicious over it. I told him I was coming here and he said he'd drop in about five and report progress."

"That's good; we'll have the second act in good shape by that time.
But how on earth will he square himself with Mrs. Jack?"

Laura's reply was drowned in a shrieking of whistles and a clanging of bells. For some time there had been evidences of a disturbance in the neighborhood, but the clamor in the street below—the shouting of men and galloping of horses—now made it evident that the cause of the tumult was not far away. Townsend stepped to the window, and, throwing it open, looked down into a street full of excited people. Several fire-engines were distributed along the block and great clouds of black smoke were rolling up from their gis-tening bodies. He called to Laura to join him and they leaned far out, enjoying the excitement of the occasion and watching the movement and chaos in the crowd below.

II.

yellow tongues of flame could be seen licking their way along the cornice of the next house. As soon as this was noticed, there came a great shouting and rushing of men and presently our spectators saw policemen and rubber-clad firemen carrying people from the threatened building out into the street, through the swaying jam of curious humanity, into the shops and houses near-by.

"Is not that the Turkish bath?"

asked Laura presently.

"That's just what it is," replied Townsend. "It's a woman's bath, too. I don't envy them. But, great Scott, what's that?"

-Woman's Column-

FADS HELP SOME PEOPLE.

VENTILATE THE BEDROOM.

A Benefit to Any Who are Weary of the Commonplace Things of Life.

Fads have been frowned upon and laughed at, but a fad has often caused a woman to forget mental and physical ills.

The strongest-hearted of us at times become discouraged and weary. Life for very many of us is made up of very many commonplace things—the same work from day to day, the same associates, the same surroundings, and the woman who has lost her first youth, yet must keep her place in the vast commercial arena, should have—indeed, must have—some interests outside of her work.

Do not feel embarrassed if your friends should hear you have "gone in for a fad." Go right ahead, regardless of their criticism. The woman who belittles another tired woman who takes up a fad is generally very much in need of adopting one herself.

Anything that serves any kind of a legitimate purpose is most commendable, and any little fad that will help to make a woman stronger, either mentally or physically, is far more than its name infers—it is in all truth a blessing in disguise.

COLLARS HIGH BUT NOT TIGHT.

There is a strong attempt to keep the collars high, but they must not be even first cousins to the tight stock that ruled in other days. All the collars, though they are high, are influenced by the postillion fur collar that was dominant during the winter. They spring out to form a trace for the chin and ears and are apt to dip down a bit in front in order that a double chin may have a chance to fall back into place and not be pushed forward into ugly prominence.

The distinct feature of spring fashions lies not so much in new sleeves or novel coats, or cut of skirt, but in the fact that the accessories of dress contain most of the important changes. Skirts remain full, but they were full last year; coats will flare, as they flared also twelve months ago. On the other hand look at collars, ties and belts, and you will find distinct changes in these accessories.

CROCHET A SLUMBER ROBE.

A very artistic slumber robe may be made from the unworn strips of silk garments cut not over two inches wide. Cut a large quantity of different colors and then sew the ends together like rag carpets. Usually there are more blacks than colors, and this can be used to advantage about every third strip.

When you have enough for a large ball take a bone crochet hook and crochet a chain the length of the width of the runner size you wish to make.
Crochet back and forth in plain double crochet until you have the desired length. This work may also be used for runners, pillow tops, etc., and will be found very effective.

As long as a man does his level best he isn't going down hill.
Don't worry if your sins find you out—they'll be sure to call again.
A shiftless man is always boasting of what he would do if he has the money.
In after years a man regrets because of the failure of youthful ambitions.
