MY TERRIBLE HACKING AND SPLITTING COUGH

WAS ENTIRELY CURED BY DR. WOOD'S NORWAY PINE SYRUP.

Mrs. Clara Jackson, Huntsville, Ont., writes us under date of January 12th, 1915. "I take great pleasure in writing you concerning Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup. Last winter I contracted a very bad cough which troubled me all through the summer. This winter I started to take Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup, and after taking three bottles I can truthfully say that I feel like another woman.
"The terrible hacking and splitting cough, and the dry sensation in my throat is entirely cured. I would certainly recommend it to anyone troubled with bronchitis or lung trouble. I have not words too grateful to give you." All obstinate coughs and colds yield quickly to the action of Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup, combining as it does all the lung healing virtues of the Norway pine tree, and the soothing, healing and expectorant properties of other excellent herbs, roots and barks.
"Dr. Wood's" has been on the market for the past twenty-five years, and we claim that it is the best cure for a cough or cold that you can possibly procure.
The thousands of testimonials we have received prove that our claim is right.
All we ask you is to see that you get "Dr. Wood's" when you ask for it, and don't accept some no-account substitute.
Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup is put up in a yellow wrapper; three pine trees the trade mark; price, 25c and 50c.
Manufactured only by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

A Romance of Monte Carlo

"By jove! It's coming on thick.
That's the worst of these mountains—they cloud up in no time."

Julia rose.
"Look!" she said. "It's coming along just like a moving wall. Shall we wait till it passes? If we don't, we must walk right into it."

"It doesn't matter in the least," said he. "We'll get into it, any way Come on."
They walked towards the cloud billow that was steadily drifting toward them. It looked so hard and definite that one might have thought meeting it one would have been at once engulfed; yet that was not so in the least. The air grew misty around them, tatters of fog blew past, thinning increased, and then, gradually, they were in the thick of it, absolutely cut off from the world, so that if they had stepped aside one from the other for a few yards they would have been as invisible one to the other as two people in separate rooms.

"Isn't this vile!" said Julia, stopping dead.
"Utterly. But come on. I don't want to lose the track. Confound it, I believe I have!"

Julia looked down at the ground they could see only for a yard or so around them. The track then had come by was little more than a bridge road, marked by a few wheel ruts. There was no sign of where ruts here; nothing but coarse grass and clumps of thyme.

"Let's try to the right," said Cars-lake.

They did, and found nothing.
"What is the good in bothering about the track?" said the girl. "I know quite well the direction we came from and it's quite easy to take it."

"All right," said Carslake, with a laugh. "You'll be the guide." She led the way quite confidently.
"The club house will be on our right," she said, "and the road down to La Turbie straight before us."

The fog as they went grew thicker now, and now thinner. Sometimes a faint trace of a ghastly pale and sinking sun appeared, only to be instantly blotted out.

They had gone a hundred yards, or maybe a hundred and fifty, when Cars-lake stopped.

"Do you know?" he said, "that the ground is rising? We are beginning to go up hill."

Julia could have cried. The depression of the fog added itself to her utter loss of confidence. She had been sure they were in the right direction.

"I thought as much," said Cars-
lake.

"Then why didn't you say so?"
"What was the use? We were both equally lost, and you seemed so certain. I thought you might have some special instinct—one never knows."

Anyhow, we have a base to start from, the club house lies to the right of the hill and if we can reach it we shall find shelter till this stuff blows by. Come on!"

They turned their backs to the hill and started, advanced some two hundred yards and then found that they were going down hill.

"We've missed the club house," said Julia, "but we've found the way to the road, and once we are on the road—"

She stopped dead before a newly cut drain into which they would have stepped the next moment.

"We didn't pass this thing when we came," said Carslake. "No, this is not the way to the road; but it may lead us to the club house."

A faint wind, icy chill, was moving around them—one could not tell from which direction it was blowing. Now and then it would cease and everytime it ceased it seemed to come from a different quarter, a thing as tricky and sinister as the fog itself.
To the fog was added an increasing darkness, for the sun was now sinking.

All at once she felt a cape of warmth on her shoulders. Carslake had taken off his coat and was wrapping her in it.

"No," she said. "Please don't. I am quite warm without it. You'll be frozen. I will not—"

"We'll talk about that later on," said he, buttoning the top button up around her neck. "I'm in command of the expedition just at present and my orders must be strictly obeyed.
Now, come on and help me to find the place. First we'll try up the drain in the direction we don't think it is, then the other way."

"But you'll be frozen without your coat."

"It takes a lot to freeze me. Now, come on and let's see what we can do."

They skirted along the drain to where it ended at a patch of broken ground. Then they harked back.
It led them a long way, but at last they were rewarded. Something loomed up suddenly before them. It was wall of the half-built club house.
The builders and workmen had knocked off work for the day and the place was deserted.

Carslake leading the way, they kirted along the wall till they reached a doorway. The ceilings were not in the lower rooms and the rafters lone stood, and the floors were not finished. The dim light revealed a hastily skeleton of a room, rough alls, earth floor and rafter ribs above. A huge bundle of laths lay in one corner.

"That's all right," said he. "You wait for a minute and you'll see a change. There's firing enough and to spare and I've got plenty of matches and some old letters to start with.
Hold on here a minute till I prospect and see what I can find."

In five minutes he returned laden.
He had found three old sacks, a window frame and an axe.

KEEP JEWELRY CLEAN.

Gold Becomes Dull and Stones Lose Their Lustre if Not Given Careful Attention.

All jewelry that is constantly worn should be washed every month or six weeks. It is not a difficult matter, either. All you have to do is to make a soapy lather and add a few drops of ammonia.

Take an old tooth brush and brush all the dirt out of the crevices. When quite clean, take the jewelry out of the water and rub perfectly dry with a chamois leather or ordinary tissue paper.

When cleaning any article that is set with stones, such as a ring, be more gentle with the tooth brush, for if you brush too vigorously you may easily loosen a stone. A pendant set with emeralds, rubies or diamonds is better immersed in a little eau de Cologne than water.

If you are the lucky possessor of any pearls, remember they must never be put into soapy water, though sea water is good for them. Pearls that are snat away and seldom worn lose their beautiful sheen, so if you have a necklace wear it regularly even if it is under your blouse. Contact with the skin keeps the pearls in good color.

Turquoises are best washed with warm water and a little ammonia, but no soap. Soap is apt to turn their pretty blue into a green. When you are cleaning opals, be careful not to drop them, for they are brittle and chip with alarming ease. In fact, they have earned a name for being unlucky simply because they are so fragile.

When you are not wearing jewelry do not leave it lying about or in a drawer knocking against other ornaments. Keep it either in a piece of leather or in cotton wool. Steel ornaments should always be wrapped up carefully in tissue paper, for the air will quickly spoil their beauty.

Many women wear jewelry which is simply filthy—there is no other word to express the dirt clinging to the crevices in the ornaments. Needless to say, the stones lose all their lustre and instead of being an addition to a wardrobe are a positive detriment to the good looks of the wearer.

"I was looking at a woman I met at a party the other day, and I wanted to ask her, though the answer was obvious, if she ever cleaned her jewelry," said a certain lady the other day.
"The dull gold chain which hung to her waist was dull and soiled, though I knew it was a valuable one. Her diamond set brooch might just as well have had pieces of glass in it."

TO SAVE UMBRELLAS.

When you come in from the rain put the umbrella in the rack with the handle downward, because when the handle is upward the water runs down inside to the place where the ribs are joined to the handle, and cannot get out, but stays, rotting the clothing and rusting the metal until slowly dried away. The wire fastening the ribs soon rusts and breaks. If placed the other way the water readily runs off and the umbrella dries almost immediately.

MODERN MAID'S MUSINGS.

Smash, splash, crash!
Are armies crossing the sea?
Ah, no, it is only the sad refrain Of the broken vows, as they fall like rain—
The vows they will make—and break again,
Next year, to you and me!

When you consider how difficult it is for a woman to find a mate who is as good as she is, you are forced to acknowledge that it must be next to impossible for a bachelor to find his "mate"—who, of course must be a lot better than he is.

Poker and love are two games at which the amateur should never play, and in which "beginner's luck" nets nothing in the end—but experience.

If a man would show as much blind enthusiasm in praising his wife as he does in praising his motor car there would be no such thing as matrimonial unrest—perhaps.

How many women can a man really love in a lifetime? Well, dear me, let's see. How many women are there?

One woman's "mate" is another woman's pastime—and vice versa.
