CAPT. DOWNEY WAS ACQUITTED ON THE CHARGE OF BRIBERY; GREAT INTEREST IN RUM CASE

Liverpool, N. S. June 11—Acquittal on the charge of bribing a public official and disagreement to the remaining three counts brought to an end today's consideration of the case of Captain George Downey. A native of Cornwall Ontario, Downey was charged with conspiracy to smuggle, inducing another to be converted in illegal landing of goods, and himself being concerned in such landing, in addition to the bribery charge.

The jury had been out almost six hours when a second report of disagreement was brought in and accepted by the court for this term of the Supreme Court, or would traverse to the next session. Meanwhile, the trial of Harry Low, Windsor, Ont., charged with conspiracy, inducing and being concerned, will be proceeded with tomorrow.

Judge's Instruction

Mr. Justice Paron's instruction to the jury today indicated that he expected a verdict of guilty on the first three counts, conspiracy, inducing and being concerned with a "reasonable doubt" on the charge of bribery. He said, as had been pointed out by C. B. Smith, Crown counsel, in addressing the jury, that the load of liquor had been landed without permission of the customs authorities, which constituted an offense whether the liquor was duty paid or not.

"You are asked to convict a man who had something to do with satisfying the thirst of the great United States public," said A. W. Jones, K. C., for the defense. "You can't feel it a serious offense to feed a little rum to the Americans. Their mouths are always open. All the whiskey we could produce wouldn't satisfy them."

"That nation has not thought a great deal about us," he continued. "A man by the name of William Cluett, killed by their guns, lies over there in the cemetery at Lunenburg. And we are called upon to punish our own citizens because we quench their thirst."

Money Transfer

When Court opened this morning the Crown called V. S. MacMillan, accountant of the Royal Bank, who gave evidence as to money transferred to Downey by wire. A. T. Logan, provincial chief of the Preventive Service, J. J. Oakes, preventive officer, David Curran, assistant gauger, and W. H. MacDonald, preventive officer, told of the liquor's seizure in the Truro Railway yard after the car had been examined and found to contain the fish boxes full of Scotch and rye at Fairview near Halifax.

On cross-examination Oakes and Logan told defense counsel A. A. Jones, K.C., that neither had attempted to establish the writing on the envelope containing the $200 received by Nickerson as George Downey's. Logan said he had asked another officer to investigate it.

Curran told of establishing the liquor's alcohol content, setting value without duty of the shipment at $5,192 and the duty paid value at $18,172, and on cross-examination identified an exhibit as a customs receipt for duty paid at Halifax, March 9, on 100 cases of whiskey imported from Great Britain of the same brand as that included in the seizure. He did not remember any liquor being received through the port of Halifax, but said thousands of cases had been sent through the port to Windsor, Ont.

Mystery Witness

The defence then called Frank Savard. He was a native of Detroit, he said, and at present had no business. He had been in the liquor business for several years. Harry Low was his agent in Canada. To June 1, 1930, date of the order-in-council prohibiting export to the United States, he owned seven or eight thousand cases of whiskey in Windsor, all marked "FSDM." In early June of that year he had shipped some of this liquor to Halifax, having made an arrangement with Eddie Crowell. About 550 cases were included in the lot, Corby's Rye and Old Style Scotch. Low and Downey had no interest in it, he said.

Cross-examined by Mr. Smith, Savard gave his home address as 2241 Third street, Detroit. He had been in Canada on the present occasion for two weeks, having entered the country at Windsor. He had no documents and no identification card to show he was Frank Savard, he said. He had stayed at a hotel in Halifax "on a hill" but could not think of the name nor the street on which it stood.

As Mr. Smith named over the Halifax hotels the witness settled on the Carleton as the one at which he had been registered, under the name Ben Sanders. He had not given any name on entering Canada, the immigration official not having asked for any. He had simply said he was going to Nova Scotia.

Nameless

"I've been travelling without a name for 12 or 15 years," he said. He was known too well and preferred not to be bothered, but didn't intend to deceive anyone. He was acquainted with Eddie Crowell at Halifax. Crown Counsel asked Savard where Crowell was from, and on his replying "Schubencade" with a peculiar pronunciation, Mr. Smith entered a protest against "counsel whispering names."

Mr. Jones rose to make strong objection, declaring he was not in the habit of whispering names, and his statement was accepted by the court. Mr. Smith asked that Harry Low be removed from counsel table for the time being. Low then left the table.

He had first met Eddie Crowell in 1928, Savard said, in Halifax, and had seen him a week ago at the hotel. Mr. Smith asked the witness to examine the inside of his coat for a tailor's identification, but none was found. He did not know that Frank Savard, purporting to be a liquor dealer, had been summoned to appear at the Commission investigation of the liquor trade at Windsor, in 1927. "It might have been Charles A. Savard, no relation of mine," he said.

CLOCK SPRING AIDED BIRTH OF TELEPHONE

New York, June 12—Fifty six years ago today an old clock spring twanged in Boston.

The tiny, whinnying sound was the signal for a revolution in the art of communication which has enabled one man to whisper into the ear of another separated from him by thousands of miles of ocean, desert or mountains.

For the spring was part of the laboratory apparatus of Alexander Graham Bell. It was twanged at one end of a short wave wire and the sound, issuing from the other end, marked the birth of the principle of the telephone.

HOLDS MAN TRANSMITTED DISTERPER

Paris, June 11—Dogs must blame man for giving them distemper. Such is the opinion expressed by Charles Nicolle in a communication made to the French Academy of Sciences.

His researches have led him to the conclusion that there is every reason to believe that at its origin distemper was a human ailment. In the course of time it has become so attenuated in man as to produce no apparent symptoms, whereas, having been transmitted to the canine race, it has remained a serious disease in that case. M. Nicolle points out in this connection that although many diseases are communicated to man by animals there are very few instances of animal complaints of human origin.

JOHN D. JR. MAKES NICE GIFT TO BAPTISTS

Notice of the gift, which is applicable to the current operating budget without conditions or restrictions, was contained in a telegram received by convention officers last night.

BACARDI SAYS PROHIBITION IN U.S. TO STAY

New York, June 12—Luis J. Bacardi is certain prohibition is "here to stay—and you folks in this country will have to take it or leave it."

Mr. Bacardi, of the Santiago de Cuba family which long has manufactured rum, in New York.

"Of course, we do manufacture rum," he said, "and would like to see the situation other than it is; but as a careful observer of things wet and dry, I am convinced the United States will remain dry."

"I believe prohibition is unpopular, but it is one of the paradoxes of the American people to dislike something, but do it anyway. In other words, although American would like to have their liquors back, they'll continue to vote dry and stay that way."

BASE BALL BAT AND GOLF CLUB WOOD BURNS

Louisville, Ky., June 12—A half million dollars in base ball bats and golf clubs shafts, still in the lumber stage, were destroyed by fire which swept the Hillierich & Bradsby Company plant today.

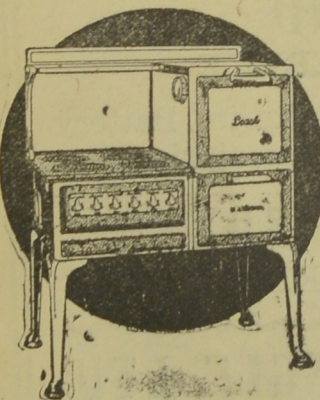

All of the lumber was ash and hickory and more than two years old. Officials of the company said more than 2,000,000 pieces, cut and ready for turning into golf clubs and bats were destroyed.

Due to raising the stitches in the official base ball so the pitcher can get a better grip, curves are returning, says a Paris style report.
