TRAFALGAR DAY

The name of Admiral Lord Nelson, the greatest sea fighter the world ever produced, is cherished all over Great Britain's far flung empire and well it might be. Great Britain has had many heroes, but not one who possessed the love of his fellow countrymen as did Lord Nelson, and he in turn loved his native land with all his heart and soul. The great sailor was born in Norfolk in 1758, and made his first voyage to sea when twelve years of age, sailing with his uncle in an attempt to discover a northwest passage. He continued to follow the sea and in 1793, after a declaration of war on the new republic of France, sailed to the Mediterranean in command of a warship. The next year he suffered the loss of his right eye in an engagement at Calvi, and during the next year lost his right arm at Santa Cruz. Upon attaining the rank of Admiral he shattered the naval power of France and her allies by such notable victories as Cape St. Vincent in 1797, the Nile, in 1798, and the Trafalgar in 1805, where he met his death.

The great battle of Trafalgar, where Nelson crushed the combined fleets of France and Spain, was fought on October 21st, 1805, just one hundred and twenty six years ago today. It was a glorious day in British history, as on that day Britain, as the result of the masterly seamanship and heroism of Nelson, became mistress of the seas. Nelson appeared on the deck of his flagship, the Victory, soon after daylight, and could plainly see the enemy fleet formed in two lines of battle, twelve miles to leeward. After giving orders to his ships to bear down upon the enemy the Admiral returned to his cabin and wrote the following prayer:

"My the God, whom I worship, grant to my country, and for the benefit of Europe in general, a great and glorious victory, and may no misconduct in anyone tarnish it; and may humanity after victory be the predominant feature in the British fleet. For myself individually I commit my life to Him that made me; and may His blessing alight on my endeavors to serve my country faithfully. To Him I resign myself and the just cause that is entrusted me to defend."

Upon returning to the deck it was suggested to Nelson that a signal was wanting so that the men of the fleet might understand what was expected of them. The words were scarcely uttered before that famous signal was made which will be remembered as long as the English language and the memory of England shall endure: "England Expects Every Man to do His Duty." It is a matter of history that the gallant men of the British fleet did their duty most nobly and won a great victory, but it was saddened by the death of their great Admiral. It seems that Nelson had appeared on the deck of the Victory wearing his Admiral's frock coat, bearing on the breast four stars of orders, with which he had been invested. He was told that there were sharpshooters on board the French ships and the suggestion was made that he changed his dress. His reply was, "In honor I gained them and in honor I will die with them." At quarter past one o'clock a bullet fired from the mizzen of the French ship Redoubtable, struck him on the epaulet of the left shoulder, inflicting a mortal wound from which he died soon afterwards. He had the satisfaction of knowing, before he passed away, however, that he had nobly done his duty and that his fleet had won the most glorious victory ever achieved upon the seas. He gave up his life in the hour of victory, and could scarcely have departed in a brighter blaze of glory, a glory that can never fade and one that will always be an inspiration to the youth of the British Empire.

The Department of Lands and Mines is displaying great diligence this season in dealing with violations of the game law. Hon. Mr. Tilley head of the department is determined that the law will be determined without fear or favor. A fact that is sometimes overlooked is that the game belongs to all of the people and is not the special property of those who spend the greater part of their time scouring the woods. There are indications that even the idle rich type of sportsman are going to be made to understand that they cannot violate the law and get away with it.

Somebody has called flattery the sweetest of all poisons. When somebody is telling you nice things about yourself which you know are not true you can be pretty sure that he also knows they are not true and that he is telling them to you for a purpose.

The paramount question is, are these screen kisses as long as they seem to be, or slow-motion used to make them seem longer?

SAYS BUTLER USED 'SAVE' IN RIGHT PLACE

Detroit, Oct. 21—Dr. Nicholas Murray Butler, president of Columbia University, who was charged with making "a very common error" in sentence structure, today had a champion in the Detroit Free Press. Dr. Frank H. Vizetelly, famous lexicographer, asserted that Butler erred when he wrote: "Save the Ancient Roman Empire and Great Britain, no people in history has ever been so closely intertwined with the whole civilized world as are the American people today."

The word "other," Dr. Vizetelly said, should have been used between the words "no" and "people." Says the Free Press:

"What does Dr. Vizetelly think the word 'save,' at the beginning of the sentence, was put there for? Obviously to take the place of 'other.' The insertion of 'other' before 'people' would have been redundancy—a 'very common error,' among even compilers of dictionaries apparently."

WOMEN ARE ACTIVE IN THE G. B. ELECTION

London, England, Oct. 20—Great Britain's women, as candidates, campaign workers and voters, will play a decisive roll in the coming general election to determine the life of the national government.

The Labor party is expected to have 20 to 25 women candidates for the House of Commons, and the Conservatives and Liberals about a dozen each. The number of representative independent groups has not been decided. In the 1929 election 69 women candidates were put forward by all parties and 14 were elected.

The most prominent of this year's candidates are Lady Astor, who is standing for re-election as a Conservative; Margaret Bondfield, Laborite and former minister of labor; the Duchess of Atholl, who held a cabinet post in the last Conservative government; and Megan Lloyd George, daughter of the Liberal leader, who is campaigning on her record as a staunch supporter of her father.

Political organization are besieged by women and girls eager to aid in boosting candidacies for their favorite nominees. Most of them will be used in the routine work, distributing campaign material, while the more talented ones will stump the country.

Among the tireless campaign workers is Isabel MacDonald, daughter of the prime minister. She is carrying the fight for his re-election into the enemy's camp in Seaham Harbor, which once sent him to Parliament but now has rejected him. So also will work for her brother, Malcolm, in Bessetlaw.

Miss MacDonald will have a worthy competitor in Miss Lloyd George, who will defend her father against a woman Labor candidate and a male Conservative in Carnarvon, as well as attending to her own candidacy in Anglesey.

Under a new register dating from Oct. 15, more women exercised the franchise than in any previous election. Of approximately 30,000,000 eligible voters, women are expected to outnumber men but about 2,000,000 admit it is believed this preponderance may turn the balance in favor of the national government.

The female vote was credited largely with turning Stanley Baldwin's Conservative government out of power in 1929 and elevating Ramsay MacDonald's Labor ministry.
