The Queen of Spain Denies That King Has Abdicated the Throne

Tells a Paris Newspaper That the Report is False
As He Has Merely Gone Away—Spain's Royal
Exiles Welcomed to France.

PARIS, April 16—Queen Victoria was quoted in Le Journal today as denying that King Alfonso had abdicated. The report of his abdication is false. She was quoted as saying: "He has merely gone away, that's all." The reversal of Spanish opinion was unexpected. It was like a Red drive—a communist wave sweeping everything away. If we had remained in Madrid I don't know what would have happened to us; perhaps our lives would have been sacrificed.

"The King did not want to call the army or to summon the 10,000 civil guards who were faithful to the last King."

The Queen in Paris

Paris, April 16—Spain's royal exiles, Alfonso XIII. and his family, arrived in France today to receive the acclaim of monarchists and admirers.

Queen Victoria, accompanied by her children, reached Paris at 9.15 a. m., after a day of travel under trying conditions. She arrived a short time after her husband disembarked at Marseilles from the cruiser Prince Alfonso, on which he sailed from Cartagena yesterday.

"Oh, that's good news," the Queen said, when informed of her husband's arrival. The Queen and her children were smiling when they were greeted by the cheers of hundreds of monarchists in Paris. "We've been weeping," said the Queen, not because of our sadness but because of our appreciation of the kindness shown us everywhere.

FRENCH TOWNS SAME NAMES CONFUSE P.O.

Paris, April 16—Nervous and overworked with the confusion resulting from too many French villages of the same name, the French postal department has started a movement to simplify French postal addresses.

France is divided into 88 departments which in turn are divided into thousands of communes and villages. In these 68 departments the name Saint Maurice is the most popular while Saint Remy comes second with 6. Other popular saints are Saint Michel and Saint Colombe with 15 each, Saint Martin and Saint Saviour with 14.

Since none of these villages wish to give up the name of their protecting saint, the postoffice officials are suggesting they add some sort of prefix or suffix to distinguish them.
