A MANY SIDED QUESTION

There is no question that in this skeptical age the learned professions have suffered a loss of caste, says an exchange. The condition may be temporary, but for the moment at least there is less believing in their mysteries and signs. Scarcely a week goes by but a concerned cleric laments the weakening of faith among the faithful. In the last few days three of the best magazines have published a total of six articles discussing various phases of medical practice in terms or rackets. Lawyers on the criminal side are under constant critical attack in the larger cities.

Events of the last two years have added economists to the list of discredited magicians. The remains of the reputations of the more hopeful of them were found in the ruins of the 1929 stock market; and if there is a group more baffled than another now concerning the trend of business in the near future it is those who profess to have mystic intelligence in the field. A New York newspaper, in its annual survey of business, prints the opinions of 100 economists, bankers, industrial giants and others with large stakes depending on developments of tomorrow.

From these opinions, we learn that recovery will begin next month, next fall, next year; that commodity prices must rise before business can improve, and that they will fall while business is on the mend; that low interest rates are needed to aid recovery and that recovery will be speeded by higher rates; that our improvement does and does not depend on an improvement in Europe; that we can get along with the Canadian market and that the development of the world market is our sole hope; that money should be saved and that prosperity can not return until it is spent freely; that there is plenty of gold, and that the world is in the grip of a shortage; that cancellation of foreign debts will and will not be helpful; that the tariff policy is an abstacle to international trade and a prop to our prosperity.

Woodstock Sentinel-Review: Propaganda says the Kingston Whig-Standard, has progressed to the point where the average editor's waste-basket is the entire office floor. Yes, it's getting pretty thick. The first mail on this desk yesterday morning, after the real letters had been sorted out, produced free publicity material from about twenty different concerns. Five contributions were from automobile manufacturers, mostly in the United States. Two were all about a grain show, one from a financial service, one from a broker and four from radio broadcasting concerns. Quite a few went into or toward the waste-basket unopened, their appearance being familiar. And the remainder went there eventually except two, reserved for perusal sometime, maybe.

It is announced that a delegation of New Brunswick guides, now attending a Sportsman's Show at Philadelphia, will be received by President Hoover tomorrow at the White House at Washington, D. C. Senator Gould, of Presque Isle, Maine, a staunch friend of New Brunswick will introduce the delegation to the chief executive. President Hoover is a real outdoor man, and will no doubt extend a very cordial welcome to the sturdy guides from New Brunswick.

The Shetland festival of Up-hella-aa, a survival of a Norse ceremony in honor of the coming spring, has just been celebrated. We recall having heard a couple of movers mention it lately, while lifting a square piano.

Seekers for bargains are notified that New York wants to sell several blocks of elevated railway and Ethiopia is prepared to mark down seven million postage stamps of issue dating back to 1894.

All statistics for 1930 are now in, including the revised measurement of the earth, which is smaller than was supposed, and will require fewer things laid end to end to reach around it.

The silver in the English shilling, equivalent of our quarter dollar, is worth only three cents now, or slightly less than the thin silver lining in many a cloud.

However unimportant it is, we prefer that our position be clear. There is no objection to the practice of putting spinach in cans, provided it is allowed to remain there.

"An invention has been perfected important What the country needs much more urgently is something to stop the practice of making noise and calling it music.

Swedish whaler has drawn a circle around Antarctica within which claimants of ice-capped lands may play their international game of marbles.

An American scientist says one noise can be used to silence another. The little bell on the cash register, for instance, stops the sound of moaning.

What we can't understand is why alienated affections are worth so very much if they are so easily alienated.

In Miami there is an elephant that plays golf. They say an elephant never forgets, but just let that one make a round in 163!

These big bankers who say stocks are too cheap could buy up all the bargains and make a killing, but they don't want any more money.

Now that German scientists have doubled the power of the microscope it may be possible to find the oyster in the church stew.

Northwestern University has paid $1,000 for ejecting a foot ball fan from a game. There's a lot of overhead in this higher education.

It is easier to argue with one man than against twenty.

An impossible world to imagine would be one that would please everybody.

Some love temptation, and not for the strength of character resistance gives them.

Our English language makes it possible for a law to go into effect without taking effect.

Lima Beane says the spirit of the good old days was a nocturnal whoop and a sunrise groan.

Many days have gone since Niagara Falls sprung a leak and the plumber hasn't arrived yet.

Hi Slocom thinks that the fool name "The Millionaires" was enough to queer any hockey team.

Another time the honeymoon is over is when the husband begins to depreciate as fast as a new car.

Looking up the record of the author, who wrote "Man wants but little here below," we find he was not a go-getter.

Despair is a spurtack with a bumping-post at the dead end. Hope is the main line for any who want to get anywhere.

Before starting out on a campaign to make people happy it is well of understand that every man is his own cloud, and you are not the sun.

Crazed With Neuralgia, Relief Seemed Impossible

Petersville, N. B., Feb. 25—The experience of Mrs. Harry F. McDonald is not an unusual one. "I would have gone crazy with the pain of neuralgia and toothache had I not secured relief. My suffering was terrible. As soon as I used NERVILINE I got relief. I wouldn't be without NERVILINE. My children and my husband caught bad colds and had to go to bed. NERVILINE was rubbed on their sore throats, they used it as a gargle, and in a short time they were well. I consider 35c bottle of NERVILINE a necessity in every home."—Mrs. Harry F. McDonald.

For coughs, colds, sore throat, neuralgia and rheumatism, NERVILINE will prove a boon to all that use it.

"Once upon a time," the phrase that makes a fairy story out of a falsehood.
