A NOTABLE ASSASSINATION

On the 3rd of July, fifty years ago, President Garfield was shot at 28 minutes past nine as he was entering the Baltimore and Potomac Depot to take the train for Long Branch. Others of the party had taken seats in the train, and the President and Secretary Blaine entered, arm in arm. As they reached the ladies' waiting room a man who stood on the right of the President raised his arm and deliberately fired two shots from a revolver. The first ball entered immediately above the kidneys on the left side. The President, stunned by the shock, immediately turned about, when the villain shot a second time, the bullet striking the front of the shoulder and passing out beneath the shoulder blade. The assassin, Charles J. Guiteau, of Chicago, shouted: "I am a stalwart. It had to be done." Mr. Benson, ex-chief of the Secret Service, who happened to be standing near, heard the shots and rushed and seized the assassin just as he was about to raise the pistol, with three chambers still loaded, to shoot Secretary Blaine. It is thought, throttled him and threw him to the ground. The police hurried Guiteau to jail, escaping the maddened mob. Garfield died at 7 in the evening. As a result of the assassination Vice-President Arthur became President.

Great progress has been made in medical science since the murder of President Garfield. It is well known that following the shooting of the president surgeons who were quickly summoned performed an operation in the railroad station, thus jeopardizing the slim chance the patient had for recovery. Had the methods now employed by medical science been then in vogue the life of the President might have been saved.

HUMAN REACH

Young men and young women home from college, working at whatever jobs they can find this summer, will do well to put in a part of their evenings reading biography—lives of men and women who have gotten somewhere in this world. How did they do it? Were they the results of chance or hard work? Now and then someone comes along who shows by mind and heart and achievement what the human soul at its best is capable of. Inspiration that comes from reading the lives of the great must be more than the stuff of dreams. Inspiration should mark the beginning of reality. We learn what can be done by finding out what has been done. If you can bug or borrow a book, read biography.

Capt. Frank Hawks, the speed king of the air, who has been in Europe breaking records, returned to New York last evening, making the flight from Montreal in an hour and forty minutes. He arrived in Quebec a few days ago on the Empress of France and afterwards made flights to Ottawa and Montreal in fast time. Capt. Hawks is easily one of the outstanding figures in aviation.

—Young husband who appeared in a Western Court very much to the bad physically, horsed combat, so to speak, complained that his bride objected strenuously and apparently effectively when he "began to take over the reins" of the new love nest. It would appear that his practical helpmeet had been first to reach the Well of St. Keyne.

There would not be the accumulation of things in attics and so-called storerooms that there is if everyone made it a practice to sell or give things no longer useful to him, to those who can use them.

"Because it saves space in the bakers oven, the square pie is gaining ground," says a Boston item. You'd think, though, the corners would endanger the movie comedian's eyes.

A Washington artist, according to the Post of that city, can paint objects so naturally that dogs bark at his pictures. Is he sure that what he thought was a dog wasn't a critic?

A Lindbergh may hop to Paris with a ham sandwich, but it is doubted if a round, the-world flight can be negotiated on much less than a $1.50 club special.

"A matter has come up, Your Honor," said the weary foreman of the jury, "in which we need the court's advice. How do you score a small slam, redoubled, in spades?"

Highbrows and lowbrows have one train in common. They do their loudest cheering when the speaker tells them how intelligent his audience is.

Home-grown strawberries are all so good this season that gravity isn't bringing the big, heavy ones to the top, as formerly.

The Saturday Evening Post will come out hereafter on Tuesday, instead of coming out, as formerly on Thursday instead of Saturday.

Of course the awkward thing about adapting Scotch jokes to the world debt situation at this time is having to tell them in French dialect.

"Doctors Make Plea for Cleaner Streets"—headline. Confirming the common belief that doctors are not good business men.

One way to help eliminate the traffic congestion on Sunday is for more people to attend church.

WAITS LONG FOR PRESENT

Chicago, July 8—Charles Proctor didn't go home Christmas Eve, 1928. On Christmas day, he rushed in exclaiming:

"My goodness, I forgot your present."

So saying, he rushed out. And hasn't come back yet.

Mrs. Proctor, believing two and a half years is ample time for anyone to buy a present, obtained her divorce Friday.
