Of Interest to Women

DAYTIME FROCK

(New York Sun)

That good old standby, the daytime dress, which sees most women through until the cocktail hour at least, is more interesting than ever this year. It remains short enough for practicability and long enough for grace—at least twelve to fifteen inches from the floor. With Paris emphasizing color and fabric contrasts, it is smarter this year to wear a separate coat and frock than the matching ensemble of several seasons ago. One good spring coat, this year, for daytime and a variety of frocks, is the rule which makes the spring wardrobe interesting to assemble.

One of the newest themes at least for the moment, is that of the white crepe frock worn under the black or navy blue coat. Next to that is the wide range of sugar-plum colors, the whole range of pastel shades, as gay and fragile as sugar coated almonds and old-fashioned peppermints.

TAILORED CHIFFON

The general silhouette remains unchanged, but there are many new and interesting details, particularly in relation to the neckline and sleeves. One of the most charming of new fashions is the introduction of chiffon to the daytime world—chiffon used in a very tailored way yet retaining some of that "dressiness" which makes it suitable for a grand luncheon or tea. Such chiffon frocks often come in plaids or checks or small prints, with detachable jackets and finely pleated skirts. A smart patent leather belt gives one more tailored touch that lifts it out of the fussy class, and makes it smart for any daytime occasion.

Use of lightweight woollens in a graceful way is another inconsistency of the spring daytime mode. For instance, one black sheer woolen frock has a heavy white ribbed jacket, for black and white simply will not step out of the fashion picture. Other light weight woolen frocks have gayly colored, checked, printed or polka-dotted scarfs or sleeve puffs or vestees. Many have three-quarter length sleeves. Then there is the bolero type of dress, made very feminine with tucked net vestee and undersleeve. Wool lace, too, is retained in the picture for daytime frocks.

Printed silks are very chic, and certainly gay and springlike. Checked silks, too, are smart, particularly with white accents, and contrasting leather belts. Much is done with scarfs on the new prints and often they tie in a large bow under the chin. Most of these scarfs may be worn in any way most becoming to the wearer. Combination of prints and plain materials are seen, sometimes in redingote fashion, but more often in the jacket and frock version, so practical and generally loved.

Stripes are good, too, and not merely for sports. One blue and white narrowly striped daytime frock has a blue ribbed silk jacket and a red patent leather belt. There is much use of peplums, a number of tunic effects, and lots of two-piece frocks either in the bolero version or in the short tunic version.

Sleeves vary in daytime frocks. There are long sleeves, three-quarter length sleeves elbow length and adorable puffed sleeves.

Lingerie touches, smart tailored pique touches, cut work linen and lace and net—all these offer variety, and are seen both on silk crepe and lightweight, woolen frocks. Lightweight woollens, in gray beads or pastel shades, enlivened with a gay belt, are very smart spring fashion.

WATCH SLEEVES

Watch for interesting sleeve treatments, for it is these that date your frock spring, 1931, more than anything else. One clever idea is the long sleeved frock, with the smart sleeved jacket, the contrasting sleeves coming to a bit above the elbow. The tri-color combination is everywhere and touches of red and white both are used on blue and black clothes, touches of yellow and orange on green, and infinite variations. Use of contrasting colored yoke effects is one way to obtain color contrast. Sometimes most of the top of the frock is in a decidedly contrasting color. Contrasting color sashes, the sash often coming in bold roman stripes, checks, or in three color combinations, on a simple dark, frock are a new note. Skirts are full, and pleated skirts are very new and smart in the fashion picture—much newer than last year's flare, although the flared line is still in the picture. There are lots of capelets, often detachable for the broader shoulder styles are so delightfully varied and individual, it's going to be very difficult, and very tempting and very exciting to shop this spring.
