WORLD MARKETS

Is there over production in agricultural products in all parts of the world. One would almost believe this to be the case after listening to a campaign speech by President Hoover broadcast from Des Moines, Iowa a short time ago. The price of farm products in the United States is now so low that in many cases the farmers are unable to raise sufficient money to pay their taxes, yet the President claims that but for the protection afforded by the tariff conditions would be a great deal worse. He pointed out that there were two million head of cattle on the lower side of the Mexican border, which were kept out of the United States only by a tariff wall. He also pointed out that but for the tariff the Argentine Republic would lay down wheat and corn in New York State much cheaper than it could be produced by the western farmers. On the other hand the president took credit to himself for having negotiated the St. Lawrence waterways treaty, which he explained would provide an outlet which would enable the farmers of the middle west to reach the markets of the world with their products. The president was of course, appealing for the votes of the farming population and apparently made the best of a bad case. Of course the farmers of the Middle West need world markets for their surplus products, but it is difficult to see how they are going to obtain them without coming into direct competition with the products of Canada, Mexico, Argentina and other countries, which, according to the president, would destroy the American home market, but for a high protective tariff, imposed against them by a Republican administration. Furthermore if it is right and proper for the United States to impose a high tariff against the farm products of other countries it cannot be wrong for other nations to adopt a tit for tat policy and this being so, where are the farmers of the United States going to find a world market for their surplus products. The president has promised wider markets to the farmers of the Middle West, but he has not told them how they are going to successfully compete in those markets with the products of Argentina, and Mexico which but for the tariff wall would now be flooding the United States with their cattle, corn and wheat. It is reasonable to suppose that if the Argentina and Mexican farmers can undersell the farmers of the United States in their own country there is nothing to prevent them from doing the same thing in the world markets.

BATHROOM BALLADS

No one has thought of the title, apparently: "Bathroom Ballads." Well, there it is. Take it or leave it. Since men will sing in bathrooms and no power on earth can restrain them, it is just as well that we should have a small book of lyrics for baritone and tenor voices, and even a few roaring ones for heavy bassos. When the masculine individual discovered what superior acoustics the bathroom usually has, he began to burst into song; and now we have tunes penetrating the atmosphere of the whole house, ranging from an Irish hornpipe (for rapid ablutions) to "The Good Old Summer Time" for a more leisurely soak.

This book of brief ballads we suggest should contain selections in simple words and simpler tunes for the good tempered souls who vocalize at the bath. They would be cold to anything from Bach or Mendelssohn, or even Verdi; but be sure there is a great resounding yell at the end of each verse.

OUTDOOR CONCERTS NOW RARE IN PARIS

London, Oct. 15— Not long ago, writes the Paris correspondent of the London Daily Telegraph, the prefect of plice put an official ban on those outdoor lunch-time concerts which used to be numerous in Paris. Traffic congestion and other considerations incited the prohibited of this, as of many other peculiarly Parisian recreations which in years gone by sustained the life of the boulevards.

But the ukase against street music is not strictly enforced. It would be deplorable if it were, for it affords cheap amusement to the little "midinettes," the milliners' girls for whose benefit it was established. Still, these concerts are nowadays sufficiently rare to give them an air of novelty.

That their popularity is undiminished it was evident at a light-hearted gathering in a quarter devoted largely to dressmaking. The "orchestra" consisted merely of a meleodeon player, but the songs were rendered by a girl who ought to have a future on the music-hall stage. The business part of the proceedings consists in the sale of copies of the song book.

MAY ESTABLISH A LANDING FIELD IN THIS VICINITY

In conjunction with the Dominion Department of National Defence's plans of establishing landing fields for aeroplanes throughout the Dominion, and in the Maritime provinces, particularly, it is rumored locally that Fredericton may be chosen as the site of one of these fields. The fact that this city has been urgent in recent years of placing an airport and landing field here, the rumor is given added impetus. The city council was instrumental a year ago in having federal officers here looking over a site, but since that time, and in view of economic conditions, nothing has been done. The National Deefnce will use the plan as an aid to unemployment. The work will be financed by the Dominion government entirely, with the purpose in view of connection the long-awaited trans-Canada airway. Should the capital be picked as one site, it would not only help out unemployment, but give aviation an impetus in this part of the province.

Renton, Wash., Oct. 15—A Bumble bee stung Andrew Rossi, 45, on the back of the neck while he was working in his garden. He continued working, but toppled over 30 minutes later. He died later in Seattle, physicians saying that anaphylaxis was the cause.

Mr. Harold R. Ross of Toronto was a visitor to the city today. He will return to his home on Wednesday.

TRIAL MARRIAGES FOR COLLEGIANS

London, Oct. 15—A scheme for companionate marriage at the universities is suggested by Earl Russell, better known as Bertrand Russell.

"University life," he argues, "would be better, both intellectually and morally if most university students had temporary childless marriages. This would afford a solution of the sexual urge neither restless nor surreptitious, neither mercenary nor casual, and of such a nature that it need not take up time which ought to be given to work."

MILLIONS OF RATS FACING SPEEDY DEATH

Washington, D. C., Oct. 14 —The Biological Survey is out to kill several million rats by January 1. The campaign will concentrate in 190 counties of Eastern States, where rats have become a real problem. County agricultural agents will distribute the poison, which the Biological Survey will supply.

The average loss from rats is $40 per farm, it is estimated. The drive which is now starting will cost $30,000 but the Government believes the saving resulting fromm ratIriddance will be $1,200,000.
