PARIS USES MUSLIN FOR FORMAL MODE

Paris, France:—As cool and fresh as the proverbial cucumber are the muslin evening gowns which came out for the Grande Semaine and will certainly be carried away to all smart Casinos and resorts this summer.

But they have nothing in common with the simple little muslin gown of yesteryear. They're all frilled and fussy this time and require artist to skill of the French dress artist to produce really striking results.

Narrow striped muslins are of such superfine quality one mistakes them for silk. They come in lovely pinky blues, yellows and green on a creamy ground and are fashioned with wide velvet waistbands or flowered sashes. Many times they are woven with a silk or velvet coatee that pick up one of the colors of the stripes.

Shiny white muslins is made up in the modernized Empire style for a charming mid-summer evening gown. It also appears in amber-white and looks stunning with an orange velvet coatee. Sherest white muslin was mixed original gowns worn at the Grand Prix ball. There was a narrow cure for a sedentary habit is to takeband of fur bordering the capelet on a flivver ride between meals.

Bounce of the skirt. Still another muslin gown had a necklet of ermine fastened at the side to take the place of the garment of cotton flowers which is not so new.

Cotton voile with bold black spots on a crisp white ground would have suggested river of informal garden party wear a few seasons back. In a Mirande model it appears as a mid-summer evening gown that is as demure as it is ultra-smart, with a frilled puff sleeve and a black flower smartly poised on the square-cut décolletage.
