POWER FROM STARS

With the radio serving as a magic wand, electric switches have been turned by hands hundreds of miles distant from the new projects thus put in operation. This has seemed almost miraculous. It is not so marvelous, however, as the experiment science will perform next October, says a Philadelphia paper. No hand will turn on the current that will illuminate pictures of William Penn in observance of the two hundred fiftieth anniversary of Penn's arrival in America. The rays of a star 250 light years distant will motivate electric switches which will simultaneously illumine pictures in the Pennsylvania Society Building at Philadelphia and in the Christ Church College at Oxford, England. The radio waves will be broadcast from the Franklin Institute at Philadelphia. Although several stars are under consideration, Dr. Edward E. Wildman of the Institute says the one at the end of the handle of the Big Dipper will probably be used.

Light travels at a speed of 186,330 miles a second, or 11,179,800 miles a minute. But so great is the distance to the stars that it is expressed in light years, and light that left the star at the end of the big dipper's handle at the time Penn arrived in America, and has ever since been traveling toward us at this tremendous speed, will reach Philadelphia in October and supply the impulse that will throw a brighter light on the pictures there and in England. And they will be illuminated at precisely the same moment, for that impulse will reach Christ Church College as quickly as it reaches the Pennsylvania Society Building.

This will be the most awe-inspiring thing science has ever attempted. It is wonderful enough to hear words spoken in Europe, or even Chicago, but when science reaches out to a star, and causes it to flash light to turn switches on both sides of the Atlantic simultaneously, we are dumfounded. These rays from the star were still far from the end of their journey earthward when Edison invented the incandescent bulb and not much nearer when Marconi gave the world the radio.

As The Mail pointed out yesterday the late Hon. H. A. McKeown, was the third distinguished New Brunswicker who served as chairman of the Railway Commission, to pass away with tragic suddenness. All three died with their clothes on and two were out of doors when the end came. All were prominent in the Liberal party and had strenuous political careers before being named to the Railway Commission. Hon. F. B. Carvell was the only one of the three to die in office and he was succeeded by Hon. Mr. McKeown.

The Canadian rifle team at Bisley yesterday won the challenge cup donated by the Rajah of Kolapore with a margin of 21 points over the team representing the mother country. Five teams of eight men each competed for the trophy. A feature of the match was the splendid work of Lieut. Desmond Burke of Ottawa, who scored 146 points out of a possible 150. Lieut. Burke is one of the greatest marksmen that Canada ever produced. On one occasion he captured the King's prize, and on another occasion stood second in the list.

A Southern newspaper explains why a Negro rarely commits suicide in a depression. If he sits down to brood over his troubles, he immediately falls asleep and so forgets them. Here is a good idea for white men, too.

A stowaway who bummed his way in a plane from Cristobal to Miami and flight of the horse with the driver was sent back by plane was arrested on his return for "loitering." Seems serious damage resulted. The horse that you can't even rest your wings in was finally captured in the upper end of the Canal Zone.

Miami is solving its unemployment problem by putting a tax of $1 on every owner of an automobile, the proceeds going to combat the crisis. But these must be ticklish days for the man who is around Miami looking for work in a flivver.

Adhering to the Nazi faith seems difficult in Munich for the natty dresser, as he must drop around to the coopers now and then to be measured for a new barrel.

Press photos reveal most of the returned heroes smiling happily through paper showers in New York, showing how few of them pick up the tape for a glance at prices.

"Writing," says H. G. Wells, "is 90 per cent spontaneity." The charm of so many of the new biographies is that feeling that the writer made up his data as he went along.

It is one of the most anomalies of domestic life that a man who is too tired to mow the lawn thinks nothing of carrying two tons of stone to an embankment to make a rock garden.

Striking high school students in Tucuman, Argentina, bombarded a provincial minister of education with citrus fruit, although he had made no move to croon.

Progress opens our eyes to the risks we used to take through ignorance. Who ever thought of chlorinating the old swimming hole?

Wisconsin Public Service Commission has tried to make good the saying "talk is cheap," by ordering telephone rates reduced one-eighth.

Popularity of these "cruises to nowhere" must have originated with sitting in a parked car in a country lane with a girl not afraid of the dark. If the meek will assume the mortgage, we dare say the world is theirs any day they say.

THROUGH OUR SIEVE

Then there is the consoling thought that it is easier to keep up with slow times.

Of course, when there are no two ways about a thing, yours is the only way.

Last thing a boom town thinks of is beauty and when it gets old it is too late.

It is less of a job to convert old foggies from the fogysm than radicals from their folly.

A very interesting book would be one containing all the unwritten laws carefully written out.

There is not too much human nature in the world. It is an overproduction of devil nature that causes the trouble.

Before there can be a general readjustment in this country there must be an individual readjustment in the minds and hearts of the people.

"Movie critics agree that a three-foot kiss is long enough." Nothing is said about the breadth. It doesn't have to be a yard wide to meet their approval.

A man who is a good debater often gets into the wrong occupation and wrecks it. Debating is required in only a few vocations.

Marching is always enjoyable if there are enough brass bands—it doesn't matter much what the marching is for. Just start a brass band down any old street and ask the people to fall in.

A market horse broke away from Phoenix Square this morning and caused some excitement as he galloped wildly up Queen street. A crate of strawberries was upset in the mad flight of the horse with the driver, less carriage, but other than that, no on his return for "loitering." Seems serious damage resulted. The horse that you can't even rest your wings in was finally captured in the upper end of the city.

SOME COLLEGE BARGAINS

(New York Sun)

The Woman was visiting some friends who had a son at college. It was Sunday, the day, the Woman was told, that Billy comes home. The air of expectancy that portends the coming of the bride down the aisle prevailed the house.

The doorbell rang and behold, Billy! He came dressed in a brown coat with raglan sleeves of the short flowing type. It was evidently not made for Billy being unduly wide across the shoulders and reaching not quite to the knees.

"Why, Billy!" his mother exclaimed, "Where—"

"Oh that's all right," he answered. Removal of his coat revealed a red-dish brown suit and tan shirt.

"Billy you must tell me where you got those clothes," his mother urged. "Dorm bargains," Billy answered, and then seeing that his mother was still far from enlightened, he explained: "This coat originally belonged to Fountain."

"Fountain?" interrupted his mother.

"Oh, he's one of the fellows in the dorm. Well, anyway, he felt sort of pinched for cash and offered me this swell overcoat. He asked $10. I didn't really need it, but it was a sort of a bargain. Though, of course, I didn't pay $10 for it. We debated on the price for about a half an hour. We settled for $2. Pretty good, don't you think?"

Before his mother had a chance to think he continued, "Don't think I always pay out. I've made my share too. Say, you know that bird ash tray that May gave me? Well, Lady wanted it for turpentine to soak his stamps in—you know its black and the right kind of stone. So I sold it to him. He offered me a nickel, but I finally got a quarter."

"But Billy, that was worth—"

"Still you know mother, you take some chances. That's part of the game. See these suspenders? Ed offered them to me for 35 cents. They were practically new, and I thought it a swell bargain. After I had paid the price, he told me he had bought them from Fountain ten minutes before for a nickel."

Having a bridge table give way in one of its legs lately reminded us to wonder what ever became of Leon Errol.

IN LOVING MEMORY

As time goes on the memory fades and in a few short years the exact location of the graves in the burial lot will not be remembered. The marker pictured is inexpensive and appropriate. It is a permanent record of name and dates and designates an exact location.
