ROOSEVELT WAS NOMINATED BY DEMOCRATS AT CHICAGO FRIDAY ON FOURTH BALLOT

Chicago, July 1— Franklin Delano Roosevelt, Governor of New York, is the choice of the Democratic Party to defeat Herbert Clark Hoover, in the U. S. Presidential election next November. He was nominated tonight on the fourth ballot by a vote of 945.

The total official vote on the fourth ballot was: Cox, 1; White, 3; Ritchie, 3½; Baker, 5½; Smith, 190½; Roosevelt, 945. Total cast 1,148½. Necessary for choice 766.

Scenes of enthusiasm attended Roosevelt's victory. The parade of state delegations around the floor of the vast auditorium with the songs and cheers furnished the traditional spectacle.

Roosevelt, however, was the candidate of the more sedate section of the party, the serious-minded liberals from the South and the West. The more vociferous delegates, the galleries who filled last night's 12-hour session with horrid shrieks and howls, were disappointed in their endeavor to stop the Governor, and, in consequence, the victory demonstration, while spontaneous and well-sustained, lacked the unrestrained Senegalese emotionalism which would have greeted the nomination of say, Al Smith, the darling of Democratic hero worshippers.

The Break

The break in the ranks of the stop-Roosevelt forces came early in tonight's session with the announcement by William Gibbs MacAdoo of California that his delegation pledged to John Garner Speaker, of the House of Representatives had decided, in view of the dead-end reached this morning with Roosevelt 88 short of the necessary 770 votes, to release its members.

The galleries roared their disapproval in vain. Immediately the California flag, a yellow bear on blue ground, was gently waved and the standards of the Roosevelt states moved from their places into the aisles, the organ struck up the favorite of the convention "Happy Days Are Here Again," and a demonstration was on.

A Texas standard was rushed to the platform, indicating release of its delegates from the necessity of voting for Garner, the issue was virtually closed.

The fourth ballot followed: Two Tactical Errors

Despite two major errors in tactics the strategy of the Roosevelt captains, first in obtaining blocks of votes throughout the country to give them more than a majority when the convention opened, and second in handling the convention after the election of their permanent chairman, Senator Thomas J. Walsh, of Montana, was successful.

Realizing the Governor could not obtain sufficient votes to gain him the two-thirds on the first ballot, Roosevelt's board of strategy had proposed the abrogation of the two-thirds rule. From this position they were forced to retreat. Then they underestimated the personal popularity of Smith, whose collection of 201 votes on the first ballot nearly upset the Roosevelt band wagon.

Under the precise and arbitrary hand of Walsh, however, their tactics during the voting were perfect. Walsh held the convention in all night session, permitted adjournment at the psychological moment and the Roosevelt lieutenants successfully bargained during the day to open this evening in overwhelming strength.

Played Skilful Hand

During the period of the convention Roosevelt himself played the most skilful hand. He it was who ordered abandonment of the move against the two-thirds rule. Although known not to be in favor of the adoption by the convention of a recommendation for outright repeal of prohibition, he wisely announced that all delegates should vote upon the question as they saw fit.

In a general way the position of the two major parties may now be summarized as follows:

Republicans—For President, Herbert Clark Hoover ultra-conservative standing on a stand-pat platform, in the matter of prohibition, calling upon Congress for submission to the people of an amendment to the 18th Amendment.

Democrats—Franklin Delano Roosevelt, liberal, standing upon a liberal platform recommends the 18th Amendment be repealed and that pending repeal the enforcement law be modified to permit the sale of beer.

The seventh session of the convention adjourned at 10:58 tonight until 1 p.m. tomorrow when balloting for Vice-President will begin.

All-Night Session

After a tumultuous night long session, the Democratic convention fell into the tightening grip of a deadlock at dawn today, took three fruitless ballots for a Presidential nominee, and then adjourned until tonight, to think it over.

Governor Franklin D. Roosevelt of New York, far ahead of his nearest rival, mustered a slowly-rising majority on each succeeding ballot, but was unable to make the real progress towards the two-thirds needed to nominate.

On the third ballot, the official count showed 682 for Roosevelt, 190 for Alfred E. Smith, 101 for Speaker Garner, 52 for Governor George White of Ohio, 40 for Melvin Traylor, 27 for James A. Reed, 24 for Harry Byrd, 23 for Governor Albert Ritchie of Maryland, and eight for Newton D. Baker.

It would have required, on this ballot, 768 to nominate. The Roosevelt managers had made inroads here and there, picking up votes by dribbles. At the same time some of the Roosevelt states were showing signs of wavering under the pounding counter-attack of the bloc of favorite sons.

Missouri Collapses

The Missouri delegation, pledged to Reed, collapsed and toppled most of its votes into the Roosevelt column. The candidacy of Governor Murray of Oklahoma lasted but one ballot; but when the Governor himself released his delegates, they divided among other favorite sons, and none of them went to the New Yorker.

There were definite signs of agitation in the Texas and California delegation, pledged to Speaker John N. Garner, with Roosevelt figuring as the most likely beneficiary, should a real break likely beneficiary, should a real break come. The inside circle of convention leaders heard much talk of a combination involving the Vice-Presidential nomination. Both Garner and William G. McAdoo, chairman of the California delegation, were mentioned in convention floor gossip as possible vice-Presidential nominees with Roosevelt.

The adjournment was until 8:30 p.m. but even as they filled out the leaders were carrying on their private conferences their efforts to arrive at some breakdown which would avert anything like the long deadlock eight years ago in Madison Square Garden.

Roosevelts' gains had been steady, small as they were. On the first ballot he had 666, on the second 677 and on the third 682.

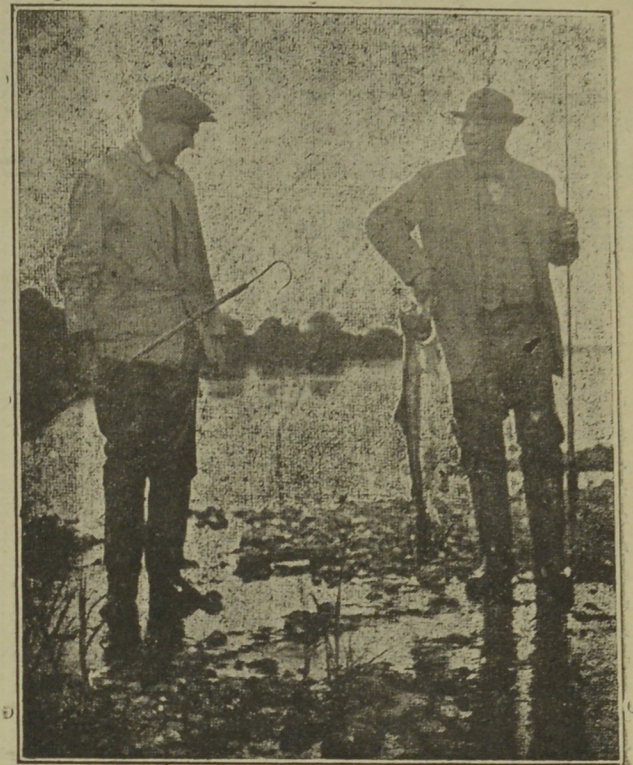

Failed to Materialize

At least some of the Roosevelt early ballot hopes failed entirely to materialize. Tammany went solidly to Smith. In Pennsylvania, the Roosevelt total was below the pre-balloting claims.

The session which adjourned just after 9 o'clock this morning had begun at nine last night. It was the Roosevelt generals who insisted that the delegates go on to the test of the roll call itself before adjourning. But after two ballots had failed to develop the victory they had predicted, they tried in vain to adjourn. Chairman Thomas Walsh ruling that the loud chorus of "Nos" sent up by the non-Roosevelt blocs were decisive.

very weary lot, all of them. They had sat through hours of oratory, even before the balloting put its added tension on them. They had marched and shouted in a series of midnight demonstrations which, en masse, probably set a mark for endurance.

A weary lot, they gathered in hotel conference rooms to go on with their negotiations—and an uncertain lot, too, for none of the best-informed seemed to consider himself capable of seeing with assurance just what might be in store the hours just ahead for the candidates, the convention, and the party.

Another Run Of Salmon

Another run of salmon of a type which rise to the fly has set in at the Hartt's Island Pool. Guide Raymond Currie, of this city, who was looking for something to start soon, was at the pool yesterday afternoon. He made a try at four o'clock and in the space of an hour landed a fifteen pound salmon and two nice grise. Alfred Rolls, of Toronto, who travels in this province for the Steele, Briggs Company, of Toronto, who was a visitor at the pool, assisted in landing the fish and had an exciting time of it. Two other nice fish were taken at the pool yesterday and good sport is anticipated for the balance of the season.
