She Coughed Day and Night.

Mrs. Fred. Fears, Cedarville, Ont., writes: "I am sending you this letter telling what Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup did for me. Ten years ago I had a terrible cold. For days I could not speak above a whisper. I coughed day and night. One evening I was so bad I went down to our storekeeper, and when I went in he said, 'You better get something done for that cold of yours.' I told him, as well as I could, that I had just come to get a bottle of the best cough medicine he had. He told me Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup was the best he had, and said for me to take a little of it before I left the store. I took some, and in fifteen minutes I could speak as well as ever. I think 'Dr. Wood's' is the very best on the market."

That persistent cough must be gotten rid of immediately, for if it hangs on to you it may develop into some serious lung trouble, such as bronchitis, pneumonia and perhaps consumption.

Get rid of it by using Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup. A remedy that has been on the market for twenty-five years. A remedy that cures when all others fail.

When you ask for "Dr. Wood's" see that you get what you ask for as there are many imitations on the market.

"Dr. Wood's" is put up in a yellow wrapper; three pine trees the trade mark; price, 25c and 50c.

A Romance of Monte Carlo

At the entrance of Jack, all heads turned and a frozen silence fell upon the party.

The fact of the matter was that the police had applied to Bachelry as to Jack—a very natural action since the suspected one had given them Bachelry as a reference. Bachelry, good hearted though he was, had a horror of the police and though he had answered readily enough that Monsieur was a painter of great promise, and that without doubt he was in no way implicated in the Carslake business, the affair had disturbed him. It was so with the rest, all of whom knew, moreover, that Julia Revall, the staid young English wife, had eloped with the spy. The police had spread this information, too.

Jack's brilliant eyes and generally disordered appearance gave them the impression that he had been drinking.

There was a general movement as if to rise, but the newcomer intervened.

"You are not going yet! Stay and have a glass of wine with me."

"But we have finished," said Bachelry. "Tomorrow, my friend, we will drink with you with pleasure. Besides, I have a throat."

"I, too," said Madame de Corcieux. "It is the air of Monte Carlo and there is only one cure for it—rest; so I am going to bed."

"Oh, no," said Jack, "you are not. Garcon, two magnum of Pommery. You are not going to bed till you drink to my luck. Guess what has just happened! I have broken the bank."

"Broken the bank!" cried Bachelry. "Broken the bank!" cried the others.

They thought his misfortune had driven him mad and they scarcely dared to laugh, afraid that his madness might take some violent turn.

"I have broken the bank, and when I entered the Casino this evening I had nothing in my pocket but a single hundred-franc piece."

"This made them certain."

"My friend," said Bachelry, "we congratulate you. It is very interesting. Mon Dieu! with a single play! Ah, my poor throat!"

He rose from his chair, but sat down again, for Jack was now taking his winnings from his pocket.

At the sight of the wads of banknotes the faces around the table changed as though touched by enchantment. It was true, then! He had broken the bank! He was illustrious, a hero; the only sort of hero who has any honor at Monte Carlo.

"Let's see how much it is," said Jack. "I haven't counted it."

He spread out a gorgeous thousand franc note, placed another on top of it and another on top of that. The others counted with him and the waiter, with the open magnum in his hand, who had just arrived, did not pour out the wine but paused to watch like the rest.

There were ninety-four notes of a thousand francs, some hundred-franc notes and the gold and silver in his pockets.

He put the whole lot on the table. "And I made all that out of a hundred-franc piece," said he.

"Oh, Mon Dieu!" murmured Fatou Gaye. "What a man you are!"

When they had admired and wondered enough they all went upstairs. Jack ordered a bed-room, for the lonely journey back to La Turbie did not appeal to him. Then they all sat down to cards. Baccarat for small stakes was the game and Jack lost five pounds in the course of a couple of hours, feeling very much as Gulliver might have felt if he had sat down to cards with the Lilliputians.

It was now three o'clock in the morning and, bidding good night to the rest, he rose to go.

In the passage outside, as he passed down it, he was stopped by a voice at his elbow. It was Fatou Gaye. She had followed him.

CHAPTER XVIII.

Fatou had been drinking a good deal of champagne, she had been smoking cigarettes and she had won a couple of louis.

She was laughing now rather thickly and she took Jack by the arm as if to steady herself.

"Come here for a moment," said Fatou. "I want to speak to you."

She placed her hand on a door handle, opened the door and, switching on the electric light, exposed to view a little sitting room. Next moment Jack found himself alone with Fatou Gaye, who had closed the door.

She took her seat on the corner of the centre table and proceeded to light a cigarette, laughing as she did so.

Jack did not in the least wish to be alone with the damsel, especially considering the fact that he had ninety-four thousand-franc notes on his person, and she knew it.

"See here," said Fatou, who had mastered the cigarette, "I've heard about your wife. Poor old chap! How did it happen?"

"What happen? Nothing has happened."

Fatou laughed. "I knew it all the time! The first time I set eyes on her, I knew what she was, and she was always so tres comme il faut! Bah! Where are you going?"

Jack had turned to the door. "I'm going to bed. I'm tired."

Then he backed off and made for his own room, where he stretched himself on the couch and fell asleep. He was awakened by a beam of sun light and, looking at his watch, found that it was nine o'clock. The four hours' sleep had refreshed him wonderfully. With the sense that money worries were no more, had returned somewhat of his old light-hearted and irresponsible way of looking at life.

Half an hour later he was entering the hotel at La Turbie. The table where he usually breakfasted was waiting for him and on the table was a letter.

(To be Continued.)

-Woman's Column-

UMBRELLA STYLES CHANGE

The umbrella is another detail of woman's costume which has its importance. For some years we have been accustomed to see women carrying umbrellas with handles suggestive of Bo Peep's crook but now all that is changed; women go about with a short, sturdy little thing which has a short handle ending in a knob and a leather strap, which buttons and unbuttons more or less easily to the wrist. It is quite convenient and practical both for the woman who owns it and the woman it meets in the street, for it obviates the necessity of being carried in the hollow of the arm with its handle sticking far out to strike the first person who gets in its way.

STYLES IN SLEEVES.

All the new tight bodices have long tight sleeves, but on the picture blouses there are sleeves which recall the leg-o'-mutton outline and also sleeves finished off with voluminous of frills of fine lace or embroidered tulle. For morning blouses the simple bishop sleeve holds its own bravely. For washing blouses this is the best of all sleeves; it is as practical as it is becoming.

TURQUOISE BLUE NOW.

It is noticed that large turquoises have taken the fancy of the moment, for they are to be seen not only as ornaments on the black transparent bodices but as rings and earrings. It is just a touch of color that is very becoming, and is a sign of hope. In the early spring this particular shade of blue is to be used in the trimming of hats, and in the linings of many transparent materials.

MARKING TUCKS.

An easy way of making hand tucks in lingerie is to crease the first tuck as usual for machine tucking and adjust the tucker, but do not thread the needle. Then run through the tucker. The needle will leave a distinct line along which you run your hand sewing. The marker also leaves a line for the next tuck. It is better to sew each one as it comes from the tucker, since handling obliterates the marks. This method insures absolute accuracy with the daintiness of hand sewing and can be done in less than half the usual time.

CHICKEN A LA MAX

Chop up some cold chicken into small squares, mix with a thick white sauce and let it heat. Put it on a hot dish and cover with fried onions. Put chopped potatoes at the ends of the dish and a boiled chicory at either side.

This dish has received distinction also from its name that of the heroic and ingenious Burgomaster of Brussels.

PROPER PETTICOAT.

More depends upon the petticoat now than the ordinary observer would think. Indeed, many modistes are making it do the whole "distending function" for the crinoline effects on the new gowns. A soft evening frock of silk or chiffon that does not need the new silhouette maybe brought within the law by a petticoat which is correctly wired into the required limits.

TO CLEAN YARN.

To clean white wool yarn, sift warm cornstarch through it and roll in a towel. In two days shake the starch out of it and it will be perfectly white.

CAN'T FIND DANDRUFF

Every bit of dandruff disappears after one or two applications of Dandine rubbed well into the scalp with the finger tips. Get a 25-cent bottle of Dandine at any drug store and save your hair. After a few applications you can't find a particle of dandruff or any falling hair, and the scalp will never itch.

SWITZERLAND THREATENED BY GRAVE INTERNAL CRISIS

New York, Feb. 10.—A special cable to the Tribune from Lugano says: "Switzerland is threatened by a grave internal crisis. Many people regard the situation as the most critical the Swiss republic has ever faced."

It becomes like that in France just before the Dreyfus case, when the republican majority began to realize that reactionary monarchist and imperialist parties had all the high commands. Just as the Dreyfus case brought the anti-republican reaction to a head, so the "affaires des colonels," as it is called, has precipitated a conflict in Switzerland—a conflict which threatens to shake the republic to its very foundation. Two of the highest officers in the Swiss army, Col. Von Watterwyl and Col. Karl Egli, both holding high rank on the general staff, are accused of having sent daily reports on the movements of French troops to German military attaches at Bern. Partisans of the two colonels are doing their best to set the army against the nation and more hot-headed anti-militarists are using the affair to further their political ends. Under such circumstances the guilt or innocence of the accused runs the risk of becoming a merely secondary consideration, the real question at stake being the triumph of one or the other political party.

A joke isn't much of a joke unless it is punctuated with laughter by the listener.
