

ADVENTURES IN CONNECTION WITH PISTOL TOTING RELATED, HARD TO GET PERMITS IN U. S.

(New York Sun)

When it was legal to carry a gun without a police permit many men went armed on the theory they had a right to protect themselves in an emergency. Then came along Big Tim Sullivan of the Bowery Sullivans and changed the law so that it was a crime to have a revolver on the person or in the home without the necessary permit. Once such a permit was easy to obtain. Today you have to be finger-printed, attach your photograph to the application, get at least two reputable citizens to make oath that you are not a potential murderer and pay a fee.

Men who commit crime at the point of a pistol have been known to go to some rural police justice or judge and there get the necessary permit, but those fellows are rare. There is plenty of places in the city where gunmen rent their weapons and pay for them only in the event that they lose them. But the honest man may have a business that produces a lot of cash and whose money box is a magnet for stickup artists cannot have a gun unless he goes through all the procedure outlined above.

Experiences told

The subject of gun carrying came up among a party of men the other evening when two told of experiences with a gun that seemed a little out of the ordinary. One, an Englishman who had been in this country a short time had brought from the other side a revolver and its holster which he consistently packed day in and day out. Wherever he went the gun went with him.

A visiting Britisher cousin came over, and among other things he wanted to look over was Niagara Falls. Together the two men went there and took in the sights for several days. It was before the lighting of the falls at night, but they went forth to see what they could see. They went to the Ontario side of the falls which had not been built up, along which there was much scrubbery.

Cousin went on ahead and was soon out of sight. Following along the pathway Cousin suddenly cried out for help. A bold thief had stopped him and ordered him to hand over his possessions. Just at the proper moment James stepped into view. In his right hand he held the revolver that he had carried for so long, and which had not been fired since he came to America. The thief saw the gun, turned and ran. The two men retraced their steps to their hotel on the American side. The gun was brought back to New York and the visiting cousin wanted to know if he could not have it inasmuch as it saved him from being relieved of his property. The gun went back to London and Jim never heard of it again.

Another Story

The second story concerned a newspaper man who had forked on a particularly brutal Chinese murder case, and in which he received a threat against his life. He told his good friend, a police sergeant, what might happen and from him got a pistol that had come to him through police channels. The reporter put the gun in his hip pocket and went about his business secure in the thought that he had ample protection. This went on for several months.

One Sunday the newspaperman accompanied a picnic party to the outskirts of the city for a day of relaxation. The gun stuck out bold and one of the boys suggested shooting at a target for a pitcher of beer as the prize. All agreed it was the thing to do. The gun was handed to the one suggesting the contest. He took aim—and snap—no report. Snap again and no explosion. The handler thought something had gone wrong so he broke the gun and then there was the answer—rim fire cartridges—center fire pistol.

The newspaper man bought the beer and then threw the gun as near the target as he could and walked away. Somebody may have picked it up and thought they had a prize. It was a narrow escape for the man who had carried it for months, for if he had even occasion to draw it, well nothing would have happened except the other man would have done all the damage.

EARTH FASTER THAN PLANE

Compared with the earth, the fastest airplane travels at only a snail's pace, says "Popular Mechanics Magazine". Professor Alfred Joy, astronomer at the Carnegie Institution's Mount Wilson observatory, says he has found the earth is whirling about the center of the galaxy, its star system, at a rate of 9,000 miles a minute. It also is revolving about the sun at 1,100 miles a minute, besides turning about on its axis once a day.

Professor Joy has also obtained new evidence that the galaxy is like the far-away spiral nebulae, other star systems, photographs of which reveal them to resemble great, spinning pinwheels. They are unlike pinwheels, however, in that the stars near the center are turning about at greater speed than those at the outer edges.

Are You Among Those Who Say "I never read Advertisements"

TO SAY "I never read advertisements" would be much like saying, "I never use soap" or "I never read newspapers," or "No one can teach me anything," or "I know everything."

Many good—but not very wise persons seem to think that all advertisements are just the vainglorious braggings of those who publish them—designed to part fools and their money. The truth is that most advertisements are incitements to their readers to do or be or buy or use something for their immediate or prospective advantage. Advertisers, to be successful and to live long, have to offer something of value or of desire—something really wanted or needed by the public. Advertisers, to live long, must not cheat the expectations or confidence of those who buy what they offer or propose.

Here are some questions to be answered by those who say "I never read advertisements"—

- 1.—What alarm clock would you buy if you needed one?
- 2.—What camera would you buy, for your own use, or to give to a son or daughter?
- 3.—What motor car possesses your favor?
- 4.—What face cream or shaving soap or cream, or tooth paste did you use today?
- 5.—What laundry soap (or flakes) is in your kitchen right now?
- 6.—What brand of tobacco would you buy if you were a user?
- 7.—The watch on your wrist—what name does it bear?
- 8.—What theatre is presenting the best program?
- 9.—Your life insurance policy—what company issued it?
- 10.—The ginger ale which you serve to guests—what brand is it?
- 11.—The tea which you buy regularly—what brand is it?
- 12.—The baked beans and the tomato catsup now on your pantry shelves—what brands are they?

YOU SEE! Whether or not you consciously or habitually read advertisements, you buy, by preference, what advertisements have recommended to your confidence and what experience has proven to be satisfactory.

The things which we DON'T buy and which have a sickish life, are those which are not advertised, and which try to ride onto public favor on the backs of well-advertised products.

It is to one's discredit to say, "I never read advertisements"
