THE SIMPLE LIFE

"We are too much inclined to estimate our success or failure on the winning or the losing of the game, without taking into account the fact that on one day we may play exceedingly well and still be outmatched, and the next time win without having played half so well."

This gem was found in the heart of a story entitled "Simple Living", written by William Everett Cram for The Commonweal, a Catholic weekly review of literature, the arts and public affairs, says the Boston Traveller.

Applying this thought to more material affairs, the author points out that "the chase for dollars is a very exciting game, yet after enough have been won to assure the plain necessaries of life, any further accumulation fails to increase the true enjoyment of them."

How true this statement is in life is shown by experience and observation. The opinion is given, not to delude the poor into thinking that poverty is to be preferred to plenty, but to show that enough is better than too much. Too much brings unpleasant responsibilities.

We are talking one day with a workman who had grown rich. We bantered him about our relative fortunes and quite seriously he said:

"Don't be too sure you are not lucky. You saw, some money is good, but a fellow can reach a stage where he does not own the money—the money owns him."

It may be that God made us to be hunters and fishers and shepherds and farmers—and the farther away we get from those pursuits, the more bewildered we become.

THE RECKONING

Says the Ottawa Journal: "The people who are grumbling about taxes did it all. We demanded this, and we demanded that; demanded that we be aided, pampered, controlled, supervised, that governments follow and protect us from the cradle to the grave. A government that wouldn't do it, simply wouldn't last. Now has come the reckoning. If, in these last few years we didn't realize that governments got money to pay for what we asked of them, we know it now. Or ought to. That, in The Journal's Judgement, is the one bright hope in the present revolt against taxes. The hope that all of us or enough of us will come to realize that governments have no money of their own, that what we get from them we buy, that the cost of every single service we demand of them—and which they render comes out of our own pockets, comes out in taxes.

Christian Science Monitor:—Canada looks back upon 1932 with pride. The nation retained world leadership in the export of wheat, printing paper, asbestos; was second in gold, platinum, cobalt; was third in wheat flour; fourth in automobiles and wood pulp; fifth in rubber tires. Canada winds up the year with a favorable trade balance of $50,000,000, contrasted with an unfavorable balance of $10,000,000 in 1931. There have been troubles, but they are being surmounted. Canada is a huge country, with only about 10,000,000 population—but the Canadians are an exceedingly hardy handful.

M. Jean Baptste Ornaux, 57, and a roadman of Maubeuge, France, served in the army of France during the war and filed application papers recently for aid He produced his service papers only to be informed that the record shows he could not have served in the war because he died when only a few days old.

Believe it or not, but a snail from Egypt, believed to be dead, remained fastened to a table in the British museum for four years. The other day it woke up and came out of the shell.

There's a housewife in Ontario who has refused to pay the final installment on her vacuum cleaner and sets forth as her defense the fact that it gave her canary heart trouble.

Hans Schlihter of Belgrade wants to become a motion picture star because he is 7 feet 6 inches tall and has been told by doctors that he will probably grow to about 9 feet.

In New York the charitable are being asked to contribute jewelry to the relief fund. Evidently relief, then, hasn't gone off the gold standard.

Eskimo dances, imitative of animals, are said to have been the origin of jazz, but civilization must still take the blame for the saxaphone.

Dollars may seem to have the jitters when they go abroad, but their conduct at home is eminently respectable.

There seems to be an increasing demand for all professional reformers to go to work. A good idea, procided the ropagandists were included. But inasmuch as nothing can be accomplished by demand, the great desideratum might be made the subject of prayer.

HERE-S A WAY TO EARN COLLEGE EDUCATION

Racine, Wisconsin, April 28—Vance Smith is "writing gags" to earn his way through college.

Smith has sustained his educational enterprise with proceeds from getting up "conversation" and "gags lines" for established professional prestigitators.

Having discovered, in his own nine years at practicing legerdemain, that a magician's chatter is as important as his dexterity, Smith, just 23 years old, decided there should be a market for conversational "accompaniment."

"It isn't that the professionals haven't the ability to write their own lines", Smith says, "but most of them are too busy with the mechanics of their art and they welcome material to brighten up the act."

PUPIL LATE, CALLS POLICE

Oak Park, Ill., April 28—When Police Sergeant Elmer Paulsen answered the telephone a childish voice said:

"Is this the police department?"

"It is", said the sergeant.

"Well", said the child, "this is Jimby, and my mamma told me to call you. She said I have to report myself to you because I was late for school to-day, but honest, I didnt' mean to do it. You won't arrest me, wlii you?"

The sergeant tried to be very stern as he telephoned instructions thta it must not happen again.

River Level

No change was reported today in the river level, the height remaining the same as yesterday at 13 feet 8 inches above the summer low level. Lack of rains, and continued cold weather has kept the river from rising.
