CASEMENT CONVICTED AND SENTENCED TO DEATH

tempted merely to organize an Irish brigade for use against the Ulster volunteers recruited by Sir Edward Carson.

Aided King's Enemies.

Mr. Jones was proceeding to argue that this did not constitute treason, when the Chief Justice interposed. He explained he would direct the jury that the letter of the law "giving aid and comfort to the King's enemies," meant assisting the King's enemies in the war with this country, and that any act that strengthened or tended to strengthen the enemy in the conduct of this war against us would be giving aid and comfort to the King's enemies, and that any act which weakened or tended to weaken the power of this country to resist the attacks of the enemy was aiding and comforting the King's enemies.

Mr. Jones contended that the work Sir Roger did in Germany was precisely the same sort of work he carried on in Ireland before the war. While the importation of arms was wrong, it did not constitute treason, but an offence against the Defence of the Realm Act.

The Attorney General.

Mr. Jones' speech occupied a little more than half an hour, after which the Attorney General, Sir Frederick Smith, began summing up. He argued that even if the defence which Sir Rogers' lawyers had attempted to set up was a valid one, the evidence in the case had in no wise supported it. In days before the war Sir Roger's defence might have had some weight, but "one circumstance not insignificant had intervened, the greatest military power the world had ever seen was trying to destroy the British Empire."

The Attorney General dwelt on the truce between the Irish parties. He said the question he asked at the beginning, why Sir Roger had gone to Germany, had never been answered, because no answer was possible. Sir Roger had gone to make arrangements to raise "the hideous spectre of insurrection" in Ireland.

The jury retired at 2.30 p. m.
