COL. JOHN WESLEY ALLISON'S MEMORY RATHER DEFECTIVE

Sir Sam's Guide, Philosopher, and Friend on the Witness Stand Before the Royal Commission--
Not Inclined to Give Out Much Information on Fuse Contracts.

Ottawa, May 18.—Honorary Colonel J. Wesley Allison, of Morrisburg and New York, mostly New York, attended by a physician who called a halt on his examination at 5.15 this afternoon, any by a lawyer who pleaded that his physical condition would not stand prolonged questioning, is now telling his story to the investigating commission. Allison seemed to get weaker as the time to take the stand approached. He sat in the witness chair holding his head throughout.

Col. Allison's memory suffers many lapses. Moments lapse between many of Mr. Hellmuth's questions and his answers. Confessions that "I really can't remember" are not infrequent. In fact Allison's recollection has a most aggravating way of playing him false. For instance, he told the commission that at the time he and Yoakum and their associates were angling for their fuse contract, he was aware that Dr. Harris and his company were their chief competitors—was aware, as Mr. Hellmuth put it, that "you were competing with people of standing with any aggregation you could get together"—and set out, under instructions, to investigate the financial standing of these competitors.

"Who gave you instructions to inquire into this matter?" asked Mr. Hellmuth.

Like a cloud Allison's affliction suddenly settled upon him. "I really can't remember," he reiterated.

But there shot at times flashes of scintillating and penetrating light. Mr. Hellmuth got curious as to Colt pistol contracts. Allison was instantly alive with keen mental vigor. "That inquiry," said he, "involves matters outside the scope of this commission."

A few moments later the Government counsel ventured to ask as to his prospective share in certain commissions for a projected rifle deal. Allison came to life again. "I don't propose to give my private business here at all," said he.

And once more, when the examiner asked if he had told General Sir Sam Hughes that Yoakum was associated with him in the business of commission getting, Allison was wide awake. "I don't know just what you mean, or what you are driving at," he parried.

Once the patient Mr. Hellmuth got sarcastic. Allison had blandly assured the counsel that he did not remember whether he had asked the cash payment of $25,000 from Yoakum for a share in contracts-to-be, or whether Yoakum had philanthropically thrust it upon him.

Mr. Hellmuth seemed distinctly cynical. "Most of us," he observed, "have come to the conclusion that Mr. Yoakum was not wanting in a certain amount of shrewdness. We would be inclined to think that there was something which caused him to hand over this $25,000 to get a partnership in your contracts. Don't you think that obvious?"

Allison paused for some moments. "Well, that was part of my business," he finally commented.

Once Allison almost sternly set the counsel right. Hon. Col. David Carnegie had come to New York, he related and telephoned him. "He said General Hughes had asked him to see me," he observed.

"Did he discuss business with you the next morning?" asked Mr. Hellmuth.

Allison looked grieved. "The next morning was Sunday," he said, "and

Col. Carnegie and I went to church in the morning together."

The commissioners joined in the laughter. "And did business in the afternoon," added the unregenerate Mr. Hellmuth.

Sir Sam Satisfied.

One loyal man, however, was well satisfied with Allison's evidence.

When he stepped from the witness stand at the close, General Sir Sam Hughes walked over to him and clapped him heartily on the shoulder.

Allison smiled his acknowledgment of this recognition.

ANXIETY OVER FATE OF LYNCH

New York, May 19.—The fate of Jeremiah C. Lynch, an American citizen, who was to have been set at daybreak in Dublin, is believed to be screened by strict censorship. No word regarding the man who had been convicted of complicity in the Irish rebellion, had come over the cables this forenoon. President Wilson made an eleventh hour appeal for a stay of the execution, just before midnight in Washington. Owing to the difference in time Lynch was to face the firing squad about three hours after President Wilson had directed that a cable be sent to London asking that the execution be deferred until the American government could make a investigation into the case.

ANOTHER ARREST MADE AT TRALEE

London, May 19.—An important arrest was made last night in connection with the attempted landing of arms on the southwest coast of Ireland, on Good Friday, says a despatch received by the Central News today from Tralee.

COL. J. W. ALLISON
WAS OVERCOME
*****
Ottawa, May 19.—Dramatic developments and the veiled insinuations involving the British Consul General in New York, characterized the examination this morning of Colonel John Wesley Allison by the Meredith-Duff Commission.
Col. Allison was overcome in the witness box as the result of close questioning by I. N. Hellmuth, K.C. The Colonel finally motioned to his counsel, who asked the commission that his client be excused. This was allowed. The Colonel had appeared to be getting hazy and was evidently testifying with some difficulty.
