PANANTHROPUS, A COMPOSITE.

(St. Louis Globe-Democrat)

Chase Salmon Osborn, former Governor of Michigan and world traveler, has given a new turn to the practice of laying things end to end to see how far they will reach. By adding up the average in sizes of the human race he has constructed a man 375,000 miles tall.
With his feet on the earth and his head in space, this giant, which is given the name "Pananthropus," could look down on the moon swinging below his knees. His toes are many times higher than the loftiest mountains, higher than any aviator has ever gone. He has greater strength than all the hydraulic forces of all the rivers of the earth. "This great being," says Mr. Osborn, "at one sweep comprehends all of the physical feelings, the heartfelt generousities, all the offulgences of spirit of all mankind." He makes it easier to envisage the problems of humanity, which no longer exist in isolated groups.
However that may be, here is a man that would be more than a match for Primo Carnera. Primo would not last one round in a bout with "Pananthropus."
