WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE.

"There were Marlboroughs, there were Wellingtons to further the English fame, But heap them up by the score and more and they pale at Shakespeare's name."

The poet who penned the above lines pronounced a simple truth. The Duke of Marlborough was a great soldier and brilliant strategist, who during the reign of Queen Anne won one of the greatest battles in history, and the people of England showed their gratitude by building him a palace with grounds twelve miles in circumference, in order that his name might never be forgotten. The Duke of Wellington was the greatest soldier of the nineteenth century and his victory over the French at Waterloo crushed the power of Napoleon. He afterwards entered public life and became Prime Minister of Great Britain. William Shakespeare, the anniversary of whose birthday was celebrated yesterday, was born on April 23, 1564, and died on April 23rd, fifty-three years later. Marlborough and Wellington were great Englishmen, and added to the glory of British arms, but Shakespeare, did more than that, as by his genius he won for his country the first place in literature, which she has held until this day. The language of Shakespeare has become the common language of the English speaking world; it is heard in Parliament, in the courts, in colleges and schools, in the pulpits and wherever "merchants most do congregate?" and will be as long as men are able to make known their thoughts to one another by means of the good old Anglo-Saxon tongue.

The great dramatic poet was born in Stratford-on-Avon, the son of John Shakespeare, a dealer in wool, and Mary Arden. He never went to college, but obtained his education at the free school of Stratford. At the age of eighteen he married Anne Hathaway, to whom at his death he bequeathed his second best bed. At eighteen he was arrested with some companions for stalking deer and soon afterwards fled to London to escape the law, and joined a company of players. He became an actor, a dramatist, a poet, a theatrical manager and won the favor of the Queen Elizabeth and the Earl of Southampton. He wrote thirty-seven dramas, and a few poems and sonnets, which have since been translated into many languages. Although he was never outside of England the great dramatist takes his readers to many countries, including France, Rome, Greece, Scotland and Denmark, and not only are we indebted to him for close-up views of stirring events in English history, but for portraits of remarkable men in times more remote. His report of the oration delivered by Mark Antony, great Roman soldier and politician, over the dead body of Julius Caesar, whom he correctly described as "the greatest man that ever lived in the tide of times," is undoubtedly an improvement on what Antony actually said. As has been well said, Caesar's legacy of seventy-five drachmas to each of the citizens of Rome, in addition to "all his walks, his private arbors, and new planted orchards on this side Tiber," were as nothing compared to the literary treasure inexhaustible, which Shakespeare bequeathed to the English speaking race for all time. It is not to be wondered that the name of Shakespeare was first in the thousands of millions of English speaking people on the anniversary of his birthday.

That such a sincere lover of his country as William Shakespeare should have been born on St. George's day appears to have been most appropriate. What more striking tribute can be paid to England with her water walled bulwarks and Englishmen than these lines from the works of the immortal Shakespeare:

"This royal throne of kings, this sceptred isle, This earth of majesty, this seat of Mars, This other Eden, demi-Paradise;

This fortress, built by nature for herself Against infection and the hand of war; This happy breed of men, this little world; This precious stone set in the silver sea, Which serves it in the office of a wall, Or as a most defensive to a house; Against the envy of less happy lands; This blessed plot, this earth, this realm, this England, This nurse, this teeming womb of royal kings, Feared by their breed and famous by their birth, Renowned for their deeds so far from home, (For Christian service and true chivalry) As is the sepulchre in stubborn Jewry Of the world's ransom, blessed Marston's son, This land of such dear souls, this dear dear land, Dear for her reputation through the world."

The fact that St. George's Day passed off very quietly indicates that Englishmen are not so demonstrative as Scotchmen and Irishmen.

Economic recovery depends only on the perfection of plans to lower taxes and increase public expenditures to supply cheap food and increase the farmer's income to cut rail fares and decrease transportation revenues, and to relieve debtors of their burdens while enabling creditors to supply further capital in expanding quantities.

A speaker at a tailors' convention predicts that the styles of the gay 90's will return for men next year. And that ought to be some relief, at that, for chaps who have been wearing the styles of the late 1920's for the last four years.

Next year's false teeth, we read, may be made of chromium steel. This sort of technological improvement may be expected to put the nutcracker factory permanently out of business.

THROUGH OUR SIEVE

Spring took a relapse on Saturday.

Those recent advance on the price of sugar is not so sweet.

Along comes a Professor who claims who stool on "the burning desk" was not brave, but just plain dumb.

We just knew spring was fooling. Mr. Robin had to pull up an extra comfort.

Why do we use the word "complex" when temperament was just as good?

CONCERNING FUNERAL COSTS

Much has been said and printed everywhere of recent years concerning funeral costs. Well, here is our answer: We have completely reorganized our system of pricing and added a number of new lines of burial caskets. In our showroom each casket bears a price-card showing the entire cost of the funeral when that type of casket is selected. Complete Funerals including Fine Motor Hearse, priced at $50, $75, $100, and upward. We give the same Careful Service regardless of the amount expended. Our equipment is the best, and our service prompt and efficient. Those who investigate, when the service of a funeral director is required, will find our prices much lower than the small country dealers, recently establishing themselves.
