Coughed Almost All Night WITH THAT DRY, TICKLING SENSATION IN HER THROAT.

How many people have lost a good night's sleep by that nasty tickling sensation in the throat?

The dry, hard cough keeps you awake, and when you get up in the morning you feel as if you had had no rest at all.

Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup is a specific for just this kind of a cough, as it is composed of the most soothing and healing expectorant herbs, roots and barks known to medical science.

Mrs. Joseph Hiley, Orangeville, Ont., writes: "Just a few lines to let you know what Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup did for me. I took a severe cold, and coughed almost all night with that dry, tickling sensation in my throat. The first bottle did me so much good I thought I would try the second one, and I am pleased to say "Dr. Wood's" resulted in a complete cure."

There is nothing that can take the place of Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup.
There is nothing "just as good."

"Dr. Wood's" has been on the market for the past twenty-five years.

It is put up in a yellow wrapper; three pine trees the trade mark; price, 25c and 50c.

Manufactured only by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

Helping Hersey

BY BARONESS VON HUTTEN

Author of "Pam," "Kingsmead," "The Black Patch," etc.

"No, nothing puzzled me at the time," he said simply. "I just believed in Hersey. But now I see that—I remember one or two things that—"

He broke off short, troubled by the realization of his own gross injustice towards Mrs. Frewen.

He had been a great fool in disbelieving every word Mrs. Frewen said as he had been in accepting the girl's lightest utterance as Gospel truth.

"Well," concluded the old lady as the carriage stopped, "you had better take my word for it that poor Violet Frewen is a good woman and that Hersey is, to be particularly mild, a minx. She wants to see you Violet does. So I've brought you."

Barnes got out of the carriage obediently and stood bareheaded in the sunlight.

"Thank you very much," he said.

"I—I am sure you—I am sure—"

"That I have not meant to be so obedient as I have been."

The old lady's face wrinkled into a kind laugh, and then became serious.

"Be kind to Violet," she said, pressing his hand. "She has lied, too, but it has all been because—it was her way, her poor, self-sacrificing way of helping Hersey."

XII.

Mrs. Frewen was alone in the sitting-room when Barnes knocked at the door.

They shook hands somewhat con-strainedly and sat down.

The sun was stronger than usual that day, and the curtains being drawn back, the room was more fully lighted than he had ever seen it.
And for the first time he perceived how shabby it really was and the pathos of the attempt that had been made to hide the shabbiness.

Suddenly, too, he noticed that Mrs.
Frewen's gray gown was old and worn, that the lace at her throat was mended in several places.

"Hersey is out," she said. "She will be back soon. She—she wrote to you, didn't she, Michael?"

"You know that she did, Violet."

"You saw the letter?"

"Oh, how did you—you have seen Lady Gussie," she faltered.

"Yes."

"Michael, she is a dear, but—you mustn't believe quite all she says—" Barnes burst out laughing.

"So she is a liar, too?"

She shrank back in her chair as if from a blow.

"Oh, don't!"

He was watching her closely now.

"I beg your pardon," he said, after a pause. "I beg your pardon, but—don't you think the time has come for us all to tell the truth, Violet?"

"What do you mean? If you mean that Hersey—"

"Hersey has lied to all of us. And you have known it. You knew last night that she was lying about having met Humphreys."

She was silent.

"I found out in a curious way, as people find out things in books. He wrote to her yesterday morning, she told you she was going, and—you quarrelled about it. Then you let her go—to Lady Gussie's!"

"Michael—I couldn't help it. I tried, indeed I did."

"I am sure of that."

He paused, remembering the words he had heard her say after Hersey had gone, when she believed herself alone. Yes, she had done her best, he knew!

"But you let her go. Why did you not tell me?"

"Because—I wanted you to marry her."

"Her insisting on going to a party would not have caused me to break our engagement?"

"No, but—after what you told me about Sir William—and—if I had told you, you wouldn't have let her go—and—"

She looked at him piteously, but he only said sternly:

"Go on."

"There would have been a row, and—oh, you don't know how she can be! I didn't dare let you know, Michael. I didn't dare let you see her—in a rage."

"I see. You prevented it in the afternoon, I remember."

"Yes."

There was a long silence, to end which he asked gently:

"And now, Violet? You don't mind my knowing now?"

Her eyes were dim as she again looked at him.

"Now, either you no longer wish to marry her, or you love her so much that—nothing matters, Michael."

He rose and moved restlessly about the room.

"Which do you hope, Violet?" he asked presently, from near the window, where he stood looking out into the street.

"I hope—I hope—which ever will make you the happier."

"Me?"

"Yes. Oh, Michael," she went on desperately, speaking very fast, "you have been so good, you are so good.
Although she is my own child, I must say it; unless you love her utterly, with your whole strength, you mustn't marry her. She—she is not —not—"

"Don't, Violet," he broke in harshly. "For God's sake, don't say it!"

Then he saw in the street below Hersey and a man coming along together. The man was Billy Humphreys.
Barnes turned away from the window and approached the fire, but he did not speak.

It seemed a long time before the girl came in.

-Woman's Column-

CHANGE MENU FOR SUMMER.

Warm weather works changes all over. We see the change in nature when the trees and bushes burst forth in new greenery and the grass returns, fresh in its bright verdure. We see the change within the home when the winter draperies disappear like the snow and are replaced by summer hangings of gay, light stuffs. We see the changes in clothes, when winter furs and velvets give way to spring serges and silks.

One of the biggest changes occurs within ourselves, however, and it is apt to prove unfortunate, unless it is offset by still another change. When the weather grows warm and a bit humid, we lose our appetites for the heavy foods of winter. In fact, a good many of us do not feel like eating anything at all in the warm days that have replaced the cold days of April.

You will find, housewives, if you have only a little meat but plenty vegetables, served in a dainty manner that the members of your families will eat with renewed appetites even on the warmest days.

Do as little frying as possible, and let what little you do be in just a bit of butter rather than of lot of lard or fat.

Rely on vegetables for the mainstay of your menu. It is all right to have meat three or four dinners a week, but you will find plenty of appetizing vegetable dishes for lunches and the remaining evenings. Macaroni or spaghetti cooked in various ways, in a tomato sauce, with cheese, in a clam juice sauce, etc., will always be welcomed. Rice, too, can be served in a score of delicious forms, all of which will prove welcome changes to the everlasting meat dishes.

Above all, have plenty of fresh fruit. Have at least one fresh fruit on each menu, either as salad, dessert or appetizer.

BOILED CUSTARD.

For Plain Jane—One cup scalded milk, yolks 2 eggs, 2 tablespoons sugar, few grains of salt and a teaspoon vanilla. Beat eggs slightly, add sugar and salt. Stir constantly while adding gradually hot milk. Cook in double boiler, continue stirring until mixture thick-ens; strain, chill and flavor. Don't Worry.

DELICIOUS CREAM PIE.

To Balgrogan—I am sending you a recipe for cream pie such as we make in the West. I hope it is what your husbands wants. First make a good pastry crust such as you use for pumpkin or custard pies. Fit it over a deep pie tin and bake. Break any bubbles which may form by pricking with a neddle. When baked put away to cool.

Filling for Cream Pie—Break 2 eggs into a bowl, add a pinch of salt and beat well. Add 1 cup of sugar, beat all together; add 2 cups rich milk put into double boiler to cook, adding one teaspoon of butter. When the mixture is boiling add 3 tablespoons cornstarch dissolved in a little cold milk, add to the cream and let it cook until it thickens. Take from the fire and add a teaspoonful of vanilla. When cold fill the crust with this cream.
Put in oven for a few minutes to set. Serve very cold. If the cream is too thick use less cornstarch next time.

THE GIRL OF 1916.

(Louisville Courier-Journal.)

The up-to-date girl has a club veranda gown, a club bridge gown, a sport suit, a motor hat, a bathing suit, a dance frock, some ball gowns and a few other togs. Yet at 19 she falls gloriously in love with a shipping clerk and is profoundly convinced that two can live on less than one real salary.

MORAN WAS OUTFOUGHT BY PHIL BLOOM

New York, May 27.—Phil Bloom, — Brooklyn, outfought Vic Moran, of New Orleans, in a ten round bout here last night. Moran was aggressive, but Bloom was fast and his blows were more effective. Bloom weighed 135½ pounds and Moran 133.

One way to avoid disappointment is to ask for something other people don't want.
