A PAIN IN THE BACK COMES FROM THE KIDNEYS.

When a pain asserts itself in the back you may rest assured that it comes from some derangement of the kidneys, for were there not something wrong with the kidneys the back would be strong and well, and would be without a pain or an ache.

For backache, lame or weak back, there is no remedy to equal Doan's Kidney Pills.

They take out the stitches, twinges, and twinges, limber up the stiff back, and give perfect relief and comfort to all poor, suffering women who suffer so much from a weak, lame, aching back.

Miss Iva A. Ferris, Mill Cove, N.B., writes: "I suffered for two years from pains in my back. I tried several kinds of patent medicines, and was almost discouraged until I noticed your advertisement of Doan's Kidney Pills. I thought it would not hurt to try them. I had only used two boxes before I noticed a great difference, and after I had taken four boxes I was completely cured. I would not be without them in the house. I can recommend them to all I know."

Doan's Kidney Pills are 50c per box, 3 boxes for $1.25; at all dealers, or mailed direct on receipt of price by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

When ordering direct specify "Doan's."

A Romance of Monte Carlo

CHAPTER XVI.

That morning the unfortunate Jack reached the Muse Oceanographique at Monaco with little enough taste for the wonders of the deep sea. He spent half an hour there, then took his departure and journeyed back to Monte Carlo.

Here he found himself at a loss for what to do. In pulse urged him to go back to La Turbie and make things up with Julia, but two things held him back; the remembrance of her speech and the fact that he had to account to her for the money he had lost.

He finally decided to take the road to La Turbie. It was as good to go there as anywhere else and he need not see Julia. He would lie down on his bed and have a rest and think things over.

There was no one in front of the hotel when he came up to it and no one on the balcony. Julia would be in her room, no doubt. He passed through the sale, a manager, whose only occupant was a dog asleep on a chair, went up the stairs and paused in the little passage off which the bed room door opened.

Both doors were closed. He looked at the door of Julia's room, as if undecided as to whether he should knock or not; then he turned to his own door, opened it and went into his own room.

He closed his door, making quite a needless amount of noise in the process, glanced round the place and then, casting his hat on a chair, flung himself on the bed. He was tired but the bed did not bring him repose. The recumbent position increased the activity of his imagination. It seemed to him that some curse had fallen on them since leaving Paris for Monte Carlo. They had been happy enough in Paris. If you had told him in Paris that he and Julia would ever quarrel seriously he would have laughed at you. The thing had begun in the train and the hachellys had been the genesis of the whole affair—they and some evil influence which seemed to rise out of the corrupt soul of Monte Carlo. All at once as he lay there he felt a hatred for Monte Carlo and its crowd rise up in his mind and an equally vivid desire for some place clean and simple. He remembered Julia's longing for a cottage in some quiet English village. He could understand it now and sympathize with it.

He rose from the bed, opened his door impulsively, crossed the passage and knocked at the door of Julia's room, then he opened the door.

"I say, Julia, for goodness' sake, let's—"

He stopped; the room was empty. Not only was his wife not there, but her luggage was gone.

A cold hand seemed laid upon his heart. Where on earth had she gone to? What on earth had possessed her? Without a word, a warning or a line, she had taken herself off like this—where?

He sat down on the bed to collect his thoughts.

There was something horrible and sinister in the whole business. Horrible and sinister, for it seemed to him that the being he knew and understood and loved had turned all at once into something evil and hateful and full of hatred to him. He could not imagine in the least the complex and subtle circumstances that had brought this thing about; the long accumulations of irritation, the sense of failure in life, the feeling that he was the cause of her humiliation and the last crowning business of the night before.

He could imagine nothing; he could only feel and his feeling was that of a man who has received a blow between the eyes from his dearest friend and without provocation.

And she had left him without any money. That was his own fault. She no doubt, imagined that he had kept the rest of the bank-notes for himself.

He left the room, fetched his hat from his bedroom and came downstairs.

When he reached the salle a manger he met the servant girl, who had a letter in her hand. Julia, when she posted her letter that morning, had been in time for the outgoing post. The postman had just delivered it, and Jack, taking it from the girl, went outside, sat down and opened it.

He read the letter carefully. Yet, though he took in the words and the sentences, they gave him no corrected impression, beyond the general one that Julia had left him.

For a moment it seemed to him that either he or she had gone mad. Then the remembrance of his own frightful position, alone, in a strange place, without money to pay his hotel bill, and with no one to appeal to for help, dominated him and made him forgetful even of Julia for a moment.

He got up and walked away in the direction of Eze, thinking mostly of various forms of suicide and what Julia would think when she saw the tragedy in the papers.

He walked miles and miles in this frame of mind and then sat down on a broken wall and lit a pipe.

He was cursing Carslake now, though if he had seen the unfortunate Carslake, who was at that moment devouring tea-cakes in the tea-shop at Mentone, he would have taken a less red view of that gentleman. The idea that Carslake had run off with Julia had not yet occurred to him, for Julia's letter was not the letter of a wife who had eloped with another man. He was anathematizing Carslake simply because he felt that Carslake was an intellectual friend of Julia's and he felt by instinct that something had occurred last night which had kept Julia and Carslake from returning to the hotel—the same instinct telling him that the something was innocent.

Then, as he sat smoking, imagination, whose home is tobacco, began to make suggestions to him. Could Carslake have had anything to do with Julia's action in running away? The improbability of that action, the fact that it was against all his knowledge of his wife, had not been accounted for by anything in her letter.

Imagination, once on this subject, gave him no rest. He set off to return to the hotel.

Salads For Sunday Supper

Peanut Salad

Blanch peanuts and place in a hot oven to brown, with a bit of butter. Chop when cold and to each cupful of nuts add two cupfuls of finely-chopped celery and an equal amount of apples. Mix well and serve with mayonnaise.

Pineapple and Cream Cheese Salad

Use pale green heart leaves of lettuce, arranging a ring of these on individual salad plates. On each ring put a whole slice of canned Hawaiian pineapple, drained and slit across with a sharp knife, so that it can be easily divided by the salad fork, yet does not show the cutting until eaten. Rub a fresh cream cheese through a ricer or colander on the pineapple so that it stands in light, delicate flakes, then with a teaspoon gently put in the hole of the pineapple guava or currant jelly. Finish by sprinkling with a French dressing in which lemon juice is used instead of vinegar. The combined flavors of the dressing, pineapple, tart jelly and delicate cheese are deliciously blended. Serve fingers of whole wheat bread and butter with this salad.

Pear and Cheese Salad

Pare a pear whole and core it. Stuff the hole left after removing the core with a paste made of Roquefort cheese and French dressing. Place the stuffed pear in the centre of a dish, garnish with lettuce leaves, pour over the whole French dressing and serve with crisp crackers.

Turkey Salad

Cut cold roast turkey in one-half-inch cubes; there should be two cupfuls. Wash and scrape celery. Then cut in thin slices crosswise; there should be one and one-half cupfuls. Chill until crisp in cold water; drain and dry. Remove stones from four olives and finely chop. Parboil one-half a red pepper ten minutes, remove seed and cut one-half pepper in thin strips and the remainder in fancy shapes. Mix turkey, celery, olives and the prepared strips and marinate with a French dressing.

Helps for Housekeepers

When mending a rip in a kid glove, buttonhole neatly over each side of the rip, putting the needle through the holes made by the original stitching, and taking one or two stitches over both edges at each end of the rip. Then sew closely over the cords formed by buttonholing, catching the edges together. This makes a neat and durable "mend," and looks much better than merely sewed together, over and over.

When smoke stains have become noticeable on marble, take a lump of whiting and moisten it in water in which a piece of washing soda has been dissolved. Place some of the whiting on a flannel and thoroughly rub the marble, letting the whiting stand on some hours. Then wash off with soap and water, dry it thoroughly, and finish by polishing with a soft duster.

To take rust out of steel, cover the steel with sweet oil, well rubbed in, and in forty-eight hours use unsalted lime finely powdered and rub until all the rust has disappeared.

There are beautiful things in purple for house refurnishing, and the woman who wishes to have her boudoir or bedroom decorated can do no better than to have the walls covered with gray, with gray net at the windows and purple silk or velvet curtains over the net, or a cretonne showing purple on a gray or white ground. In the hand printed cretonnes and linens there are some lovely designs of peacocks and parrots and flowers.

NEW YORK SUBWAY WAS IN DARKNESS

New York, Feb. 7.—Train service in the subway was halted twice within twenty minutes last night, and New York's underground system was in darkness as the result of short circuits in a cable box at the Grand Central Station. A thousand passengers, with rumors of bomb plots in their minds, became alarmed, but the lights were only off for a few minutes and the guards experienced little difficulty in preserving order. While the accident was not unusual, it followed upon the heels of a general police order for patrolmen to guard subway entrances and exits and search all suspicious persons carrying suit cases or bundles.

As a consequence, it caused fear that something serious might have happened.
