PREMIER BENNETT SEES A DECIDED UPTREND IN THE BUSINESS FIELD OF CANADA

Delivered An Effective Reply To Liberal Leader In Parliament Yesterday — A Masterly Defence of the Administration — Makes Reference To Reciprocity; the Central Bank and Other Matters.

Ottawa, Ontario, Jan. 30—Canada will never sign a top-sided reciprocity treaty with Washington that will open Canadian markets to lower priced farm products, Prime Minister R. B. Bennett announced today in the House of Commons. Only on a basis of mutual advantage could a pact be negotiated, he said, replying to demands from the Liberals for an immediate treaty.

The premier's speech was studied with expressions of optimism as he quoted volumes of statistics to show how Canadian revenue were increasing, trade expanding, unemployment being reduced and general conditions growing better.

The prime minister took time off to spike reports of a pending election. The general attitude of the people was opposed to a vote, the business communities being more concerned with their own problems of existence. The administration today, despite by-elections, had the same number of supporters as in 1930, this "notwithstanding the fact the usual fate of governments in conditions such as those through which we have passed is that they usually suffer defeat".

Government Defended

A general defence of his government's record since 1930 was entered by the prime minister in a four hour reply to the want of confidence motion moved yesterday by Liberal Leader Mackenzie King. Traversing every field of administration, the prime minister challenged refutation of his claim Canada was emerging from the depression in better shape than most countries.

"Let us go forward. Let us advance", was Mr. Bennett's exhortation after defending the world wheat agreement, restoration of titles, the Empire treaties negotiated at the Ottawa conference, the government's unemployment and trade policies, creation of a central bank and the $60,000,000 guarantee of a Canadian Pacific Railway loan.

But in one sense at least, Canada was not out of the woods. It might be that "cruel disciplinary measures" would be necessary through a "very large conversion loan" at some time in the future when conditions were ripe. In the meantime, there would be no defaulting and no repudiation of debts if the strength of the national treasury could avert it.

Reference to reciprocity was made when Western Liberals demanded exchange of farm products. There had been no communication from Washington recently on the subject, Mr. Bennett said, and as far as he knew, there had been no change in the attitude of the United States since he interviewed President Roosevelt a year ago.

But one thing was certain, continued the prime minister after comparing prices for hogs, beef and butter in the two countries — Canada would never sacrifice its own market for these products while United States prices were materially lower. "If any other agreement is in the minds of those who have been speaking in this House I can only say there will be no agreement possible that imposed unfair condition upon Canadians or that would subject Canadian dairy farmers, butter producers and hog and cattle raisers, to the competition of prices received in the United States for comparable products".

A Sub-Amendment

The prime minister spoke in the debate on the address which became more bulky with the introduction of a sub-amendment from Robert Gardiner, leader of the United Farmers and the Progressive group. More than anything else, it indicated a definite split between Liberals and Progressives by seeking the condemnation of the House on Liberal policies.

The original government motion would merely thank the Governor-General for the Speech from the Throne. The Liberal motion would instruct Lord Bessborough the government no longer held the confidence of the people. The Progressive motion would advise the Governor-General eral that neither Conservatives or Liberals had confidence. In effect, the Gardiner motion would mean the House going on record as holding only the Progressive Party had the right to administer affairs.

Refers To By-Elections

The prime minister turned immediately to Mr. King's reference to Liberal victories in the various by-elections.

Mr. Bennett stated that in Yomaska 709 more votes had been polled in the recent by-election than in the 1930 election. In 1930 a Liberal had been elected by one vote. In the recent by-election he had won by 84. Consequently, said Mr. Bennett, the majority against the Liberal on the basis of the general election would have been 625.

There had not been a Conservative candidate in Mackenzie, Sask., in this generation, proceeded the prime minister.

Election Rumors

"If we are to judge from the communications we have received and from statements made by honorable members within our view in this House, they thank God that the present administration is in office and not the Liberal Party", declared Mr. Bennett. "The general tendency of the business people of this country is not that there should be a general election. The business people of this country are concerned in the great problems with which Canadian have been confronted in the last few years."

Mr. Bennett believed some day Canada would have to have a large conversion loan; but that could not be done at the moment.

Central Bank

With regard to a central bank, said Mr. Bennett, he had said in London some time ago that when he realized this Dominion could not carry on its exchange transactions without recourse to Wall Street, he said that Canada needed a central bank. He did not indicate that the Government had concluded this as a matter of policy but that this was his own personal opinion.

He had said last year that the matter would have to be considered at the next revision of the Bank Act. But it could not be gainsaid that it had been desirable for the Canadian people to have had the opportunity of presenting their views before the commission that had been set up.

Rural Credits

On the matter of rural credits, it had been shown at the Dominion-Provincial Conference recently that efforts to establish those had been in progress for thirty or forty years without any great degree of success. This was probably due to the fact that in Canada there was not the accumulation of wealth that the older countries possessed, at reduced rates of interest. In 1926 Mr. King had declared the then Government's intention of providing "wide facilities for rural credit." the attention of the best minds in the finance department; the provinces had discussed it; but, declared Mr. Bennett, he did not feel too sanguine that an adequate solution would be found. He did, however, believe that some solution would emerge that would be beneficial to the rural population.

Loan Guarantee

Turning to the guarantee of the $60,000,000 loan to the Canadian Pacific Railway, the Prime Minister said the power to do this had not been usurped: It had been conferred on the Government by Parliament.

The C. P. R., continued Mr. Bennett, had made substantial expenditures in the belief that it would be able to sell its debentures. This was found impossible. Efforts were made to do so both in the United States and Great Britain without success. The question was "should they default or should they not" on maturing obligations. "What would be the effect upon Canada of a default?" That was what the Government had to consider.
