

THE CITY OF PARIS OFFERING SOME BRAND NEW THRILLS AS TOURIST SEASON BEGINS

Paris, July 8—Parisians and visitors ed with a cargo of Italian cheese, luckily enough to be here are to be given a brand new sensation on the last day of this month. Racing by night at Longchamp is the surprise organized by the Committees of Fêtes which has been doing such wonders to make this season a success. Certainly large numbers of foreign tourists have been attracted by the unusual preparations made for their entertainment. But for most people, one of the greatest treats will be to go racing on the lovely course in the Bois de Boulogne, its sylvan beauties softly flood-lit, while sixteen orchestras make music in different enclosures.

Jockeys have already tested their mounts in nocturnal gallops by electric lights. The horses behaved as if they were used to it, so nothing is expected to go wrong in that quarter. A grand dinner will be served; 1,200 covers will be laid, and numerous attractions are being organized for all parts of the field. The Opera Ballet will give a performance on the course itself, and there will be dancing all night. Fireworks will wind up the fête just before dawn!

And What Was Cargo?

The romantic days of smuggling seem to have been revived by a barber and his wife who have been operating on the Mediterranean coast between Italian ports and the French Riviera. A few nights ago customs officers and gendarmes gathered at a lonely spot between Cannes and Toulon. For weeks past they had been trying to catch the gang. Swift motor cars and a yacht had beaten them every time. Now luck was with them. Along a narrow lane leading to the sea they suddenly perceived a shadowy car slipping silently through the darkness. They gave chase, lost sight of it, then came on it unexpectedly. It was empty. A little further on they encountered a woman, who was unable to account, for her presence at this remote spot in the middle of the night. The next moment they caught sight of the smugglers' yacht. It was learned afterwards that those on board were awaiting the "all clear" signal to be given with an electric torch by the woman. The yacht was now running for an island called Sainte Marguerite, the smugglers suspecting that the long wait indicated something amiss. The gendarmes raced to Cannes, commandeered a motor-boat and gave chase. They came up with the yacht just as dawn was breaking. A row of revolvers pointed at them convinced the crew that the game was up, and they surrendered. The yacht was packed with a cargo of Italian cheese. The chief of the gang was a barber named Andre, and his wife was the woman waiting to give the signal for landing. The operations had been going on for six months, and each trip represented a profit of $1,000.

Sold to the Devil.

Strange, is it not, to hear in this supposed age of enlightenment, of a man who admits that he has sold his soul to the devil? Yet so it is. "Old man Gaspard" of whom we wrote in connection with witchcraft and sorcery at Saint-Menoux, in the Baurbonais (between Moulins and Lyons) has been talking to a French newspaperman about Black Magic and the dark tasks which he claims to do at the bidding of Satan. The villagers believe in him, and in the efficacy of his interventions. Frequently, when the doctor has been called, a peasant will go and fetch Gaspard—"just to make sure"—for they have as much faith in him as in the doctor. Gaspard is fond of relating that when he was a young man of twenty the Holy Virgin appeared to him with a message from heaven. "Yes, I gave myself to the devil later on in life," he confesses, and he refuses to see anything extraordinary in that. For him, the devil and the Deity, demons and angels, and the Holy Virgin all belong to the same category of "Invisible Powers." The old sorcerer has a "book of Black Magic," incantations, prayers and recipes, which he showed to the journalist. "They are all efficacious," he insisted, "but only on condition that Satan wills it so and he will not help anyone who does not believe in him or who fails to obey him. Ah, Satan is a hard and stern master. The devil has thousands of methods of making known his wishes. A creeping slug or the cry of a toad, for instance."

Here is a love philter taken from the old man's book. "Take a four-leaf clover. Put it in holy water. Say a prayer over it. Then arrange for the odour to reach the nostrils of the person for whose love you yearn."

If there has been a theft in the village Gaspard's book says: "Write on separate pieces of paper the names of all suspects. Mix and place in a bowl and recite this incantation: Aragoni, Labilasse Parandoma, Eptali-can Lamboured. If the name of the thief is in the bowl it will rise to the surface." So there you are. But we don't advise anyone to try a method so dangerous for innocent neighbors.

THE ENQUIRY DELAYED AFTER THE ELECTIONS

Ottawa, July 7—Announcement that the Government has appointed Sir Lyman Duff to investigate charges that Right Hon. Arthur Meighen, former Hydro Commissioner, profited from the Abitibi purchase of the Ontario Government creates no surprise here in view of his insistence.

It has always been indicated that Mr. Meighen first wanted an investigation ordered by the Henry Government. Then, when this failed to materialize, the proposal, though never put forward formally, was that a committee of the Senate should do it. There were many consultations on the side. The Senate steered clear of it. For one thing it was not conceded that it was a matter which concerned that body. Another reported influence was the possible effect upon the then pending Ontario elections. Conservatives thought it might involve Premier Henry some way and Liberals thought that, should the allegations not be substantiated, it would be bad for Mr. Hepburn. Much advice was tendered that, if an inquiry were held at all, it should be judicial.

The matter quieted down during the elections but now it is revived in definite form.

The proposal that "any other collateral charges against Mr. Meighen" can be investigated may cover any operations of his company in the stock in question. The belief here is that, when once the inquiry is started, it may be difficult to restrict the line of questioning. The circumstances antecedent to Mr. Meighen's retiring from the Ontario Hydro Electric Commission and whether or not this was the sequence of a suggestion from any one in authority can be delved into. Specifically, however, the investigation will concern Senator Meighen and his companies in connection with the allegations made.

It is not known yet where the inquiry will me, or when, except that the earliest possible date is desired. The parties in interest and their counsel all live in Toronto, which is also the place of the alleged transactions and where the records are. Under these circumstances, it was today suggested that the Chief Justice may serve the best convenience of those concerned by sitting in Toronto.
